The Down Factory Store

www.downfactorystore.com

Winter Extravaganza

Thanks to our retail and "online" customers we are one of the largest resources for goose down comforters, pillows and featherbeds. Consumers that compare our quality and prices to those of department stores, discounters, catalogs and other web sites find that we are indeed unbeatable - and we guarantee that! Know the facts of down before you buy.

FACT: Down comes from the chest of the bird to keep it insulated from the weather. Feathers (those things with quills) come from the back of the bird to keep it dry. Down can cost as much as $10.00 an ounce, feathers 10¢ an ounce. Over 90% of down manufacturers find it to their advantage to add over 30% feathers to their down. It's like buying three pounds of ground sirloin and getting two pounds of meat and one pound of fat. You have paid for meat and got fat, it's the same with their down, they both do it because it's legal. We do not contaminate our down by adding feathers to it.

KNOW THE FACTS BEFORE YOU BUY IT

FACT: Fill power, this is the amount the cubic inches filled by one ounce of down. Higher fill power means a higher quality down. You will find that as the quality of the down increases, so does the comfort & life of the item.

FACT: We use only high thread count, baffle box construction, 100% cotton covers on our down comforters & pillows. Down insulates by trapping air and holding in your body temperature, keeping you comfortable through the night. Low quality comforters are usually heavier because it takes more of an inferior down to fill a comforter. Inferior down becomes clumpy and it can't breath, resulting in your becoming over heated and uncomfortable. Our high quality down gives you the warmth and comfort without the weight.

FACT: In all likelihood you will have your comforter longer than the car you are now driving.

"We go the distance for you."

There's Always Something Interesting At The Beach In The Hamptons

By Dan Rattiner

I was down at the beach in Sagaponack the other afternoon watching the surf roll in and crash against the beach. There was a group of small shorebirds skittering this way and that, looking for food at the edge of the water. That was about it.

Off in the distance, a freighter was moving slowly toward Manhattan, bringing in oil or beef or European furniture or cases of Alka Seltzer or all of the above. There seems to always be a freighter way out there on the horizon, moving silently from east to west. A dog trotted by, stopped and sniffed the air. The wind was up, a powerful, cold wind.

It is the end of a bitter winter. There are glimmerings of spring. The sky is blue and clear and the temperature climbing into the forties.

In the sky, from the east, came the far-off sound of honking geese. It got louder, and then the flock passed overhead in a grand V formation, noses to tails, and I heard all the wings flapping. They wheeled around and, following the leader, changed course from westbound to northbound. They flew off.

What a spectacular thing it is, to see geese, honking hysterically, each peering around the goose directly in front of it, to make sure they are in this V.

Why do they do this? Their brains are the size of walnuts. They can't know they are making a V, can they? And yet, the length of one side of the V is never more than one goose more or less different than the length of the other. If a new goose comes along and lines up at the end of one part of the V, another goose comes along to balance it by following behind the last goose on the other part. You can almost see that second goose counting the geese in each part as it decides what to do.

> Maybe they had intended to fly in a V formation but because of the wind or something had gotten blown about a bit into an E.

I pondered on this for the longest while, but I could come up with no answers. And then, just as I was about to open my lunch bag, another far-off honking made me realize that a new formation was coming. It got louder and louder and there they were, coming right at me.

They were in the formation of an "E." They scooted off to the west, turned north and disappeared over the horizon.

I could hardly believe it. Had that really happened? I'd never seen geese form anything else but a V. Maybe they had intended to fly in a V formation but because of the wind or something, had gotten blown about a bit into an E. Maybe my eyes had been deceiving me.

A few minutes went by and then as if to confound me further, another formation of geese appeared off in the distance making another letter. It looked at first as if it were the letter P, but as they came closer, I saw it was not a P, but an R. It was absolutely clear. My eyes were not deceiving me.

Five minutes went by, and there was nothing. I stopped searching the skies. But then a new formation appeared, and over the next twenty minutes, more formations went by, the geese honking and flapping, assuming the shape of four more letters. These letters were E, A, D and Y.

And then that was the end of that.

I had no idea of what any of this was all about. It had been my intention, when I went down there, to just watch the goings on of the beach, which I always do, and then have a little lunch, then take out a laptop and write a story and return to the office.

This time, I did none of the above. When no more geese appeared, I returned to the office, my laptop under one arm, my lunch bag under the other. I was very puzzled.

"You weren't hungry?" my secretary asked.

"I just saw the most amazing thing," I said. "It was the geese. They flew overhead forming letters."

"What's so amazing about that? They always fly in a V formation."

"They flew over forming other letters. They actually spelled out two words. I'd never seen that."

"You're kidding."

"I'm not kidding."

"What were the words?"

"They were VER and EADY. I think they were trying to spell something."

"VER and EADY. Doesn't spell anything I know. Are you sure that is what they spelled?"

"Absolutely."

"Could it have been VERE and ADY? That might be French or a variation of French."

"No, it was VER and then a five minute pause, and then EADY."

"Maybe they were trying to spell something and just didn't get it right."

"That's true," I said. "They ARE geese."

The phone rang and she picked it up. It was somebody wanting a subscription. She connected them with the proper department. I went into my office next door, sat down at my desk, opened my bag and proceeded to eat my peanut butter and jelly sandwich. But I could not get this business with the geese out of my mind. Maybe I ought to call the town environmentalist, Larry Penny. Or maybe I ought to call the college. VER and then EADY. A message from outer space?

My secretary now poked her head in my door.

"How long after you were down there did you see the first V?" she asked.

"Right away. Just after a minute."

She smiled. "They were spelling out the name of a flashlight battery. You missed them coming by with the first letter. It was an 'E.'"

My God. I have to go to Bobby Van's for a drink. Geese in the advertising business. What will they think of next?

Too Many Bays, Maples, Crosses, Bayberries, Hildreths And Little Noyacks

By Dan Rattiner

There is a famous "Seinfeld" episode where Kramer goes off to meet his girlfriend in lower Manhattan and ends up in a phone booth at the corner of First Avenue and First Street. He's lost. He calls Jerry.

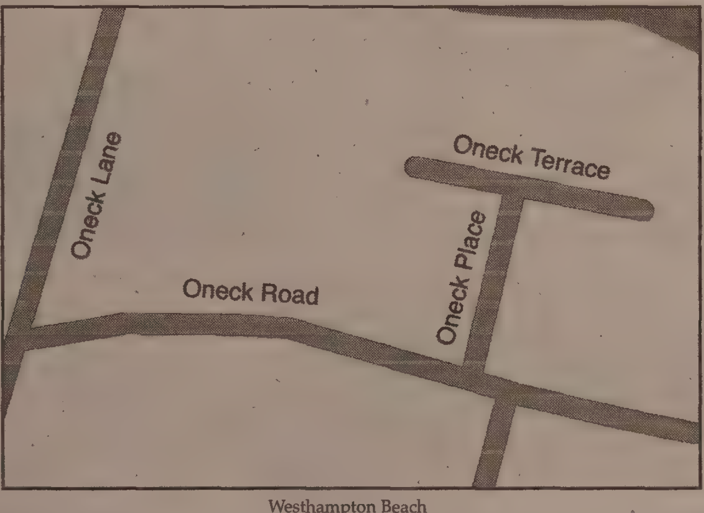
"I'm confused," he says. "How can I be at the corner of First and First? This isn't possible. Jerry, I'm scared!"

"It's OK, it's First AVENUE and First STREET. It's possible." Jerry says.

But Kramer is in a panic. He begs Jerry to come by car, rescue him and bring him home to the Upper West Side, where the streets are easy to understand. Jerry goes.

I don't know if a re-run of this episode was on TV recently, but at the Town Board Meeting in East Hampton last Thursday, Supervisor Bill McGintee began to talk about all the different streets out here that have the same name and how that is a big problem for people, especially the fire department.

"Which street does the fire department go to?" he asked nobody in particular. He said that it ought to be looked into, with the idea of changing some of the names of these streets.



www.maps.yahoo.com

Westhampton Beach

Others agreed with him.

There's precedence for it. Five years ago, Southampton Village took a look at the oceanfront street which extends the full three miles from one end of the Village to the other and noted that something had to be done. If you head west from the eastern terminus of it you are on Gin Lane which became South Main Street which became Meadow Lane which became Dune Road. Dune Road dead ends at the westernmost end of the Village.

The next year they changed it to Gin Lane in the east and Meadow Lane in the west and that was that. People have gotten used to it and are very happy about it, thank you very much.

Meanwhile, at that meeting, another of the participants lamented about all the Cross Highways in East Hampton. There are six of them. "I can't tell you how much time we spend trying to find out which Cross Highway people are talking about," he said. It was thought that one Cross Highway should be changed to Riding Academy Lane because there once was a Riding Academy on it. It was suggested that another Cross

Highway be changed to Haulseine Lane because it is in an area where many fishermen live.

There was a time, of course, when everybody knew everybody and you didn't need street signs at all. People didn't care if a couple of streets had the same names. They'd say "That's where Bennett lives."

(I might note that it wasn't until 1990 that Street numbers were made mandatory in these parts. A new law was passed saying you had to have 'em and you had to display 'em. Again, it would help out the fire department. People display them or pay a fine.)

But just look at how big a problem it is today.

There's a Bayberry Lane in Quogue, another in North Haven and another in Remsenberg. There's also one in Amagansett. There's Oneck Lane, Oneck Terrace, Oneck Place and Oneck Road in Westhampton Beach. There's a Cooper Lane in North Sea and another in East Hampton. There are, scattered about, streets called Little Noyac, Little Neck, Little Plains, Little Mecox, Little Cobb, Little Church, Little Beach, Little Albert's, Little Bird and, in most cases, a nearby road that starts with Big. And there are the aforementioned Cross Highways in East Hampton. There is also Three Mile Harbor Road, Three Mile Harbor to Hog Creek Road, Three Mile Harbor Drive and there is a Two Mile Hollow Road. All of them are near the body of water known as Three Mile Harbor, except for Two Mile Hollow, which is instead near a hollow. There are seven streets which begin with the word Shinnecock. You get the problem.

Some of these names have to be changed. But frankly, it has to be done carefully and thoughtfully. Otherwise, we are going to mess this up.

How streets got named can be divided into three categories. And each category should be dealt with differently.

The first category, and historically, probably the first names, are those which describe a location, or a way to get to a location. In East Hampton you have Highway Behind the Lots and Highway Behind the Pond. No problem with these. You have the Water Mill to Towd Road and you have the Riverhead Manorville Road. No problem there, either. As for those that are duplicates, like Cross, change them to honor prominent people in the community.

There needs to be a Thomas Edison Drive and Marilyn Monroe Lane. These people were here. No streets bear their names now. There should be a Jackson Pollock Lane and a Willem de Kooning Street. Albert Einstein spent a summer at Nassau Point here. Nothing is named for him. There should be a Carl Yastrzemski Drive, named for the famous Red Sox baseball player who grew up in Bridgehampton, and there needs to be a Doctor and ex-Governor Howard Dean Way for the recently withdrawn Presidential Candidate who grew up in the summer colony here in the 50s and 60s. In Westhampton Beach we need a P. T. Barnum Boulevard. He slept at an Inn in town once. And in Southampton, we need a Gary Cooper Street. He's buried in town, you know.

The second category of names are those that are in honor of local families, many of whom owned the land that became the street. In Southampton Township, you have lots of Hildreth Lanes and Hildreth Drives, and Herrick Streets and Herrick Roads. East Hampton has half a dozen streets named for the Coopers, half a dozen more for the Osbornes, Bennetts and Strongs. Bridgehampton has its streets named for Hoppings and Hallocks.

I say leave them alone. These were prominent names in these parts. And if you must change them, change them by differentiating between them. We all know there was a King Louis XIV and Louis XV. There should be a Hildreth the Third Drive and a Hallock the Fifth Street. These historic names are our legacy.

The third category are street names, usually boring ones, offered up by developers when proposing residential subdivisions in town. These are your Bay Streets and Oak Streets and Harbor Lanes. At the time these streets were being named, the developers had to imagine themselves standing in the front of a meeting room presenting a big map with all the new streets drawn in on land that had probably been a farm.

"Cedar Street? Sounds fair enough. What's this Amy Carol Nestor Rabinowitz McFarland Boulevard?"

"My wife, sir."

Very few developers had the courage to face a room full of people with anything as complicated as that.

Change 'em, I say. Here's our big chance.

The Perils Of Publishing Can Lead You Over A Cliff, Literally, Sometimes

By Dan Rattiner

We got a letter the other day from a very angry woman who tried to make some Valentine's Day cookies by using a recipe published in Dan's Papers.

"I tried it twice," she wrote. "Both times, the cookies came out burnt. What makes you think you can go around publishing recipes in your paper that don't work?"

Well, we're a newspaper, that's what. We take the lead. People follow. It's the power of the written word.

I took the matter to Sylvia Lehrer, the Dan's Papers cooking columnist who wrote the recipe.

"The recipe works," she said without a moment's hesitation. "I've made these cookies many times. And I proofread that recipe both before it was published and now since. It is right. The woman should check her stove. Maybe it needs its thermometer checked."

On the same day that I got this letter from the lady with the burnt cookies, the editor of a magazine called "Trails" issued an apology that was in the news.

"In our December issue, we published the directions to get up and back down Ben Nevis."

Ben Nevis is the highest mountain in Britain. It is not very high. But there is a cliff.

"Unfortunately, in the directions for coming back down, our directions, designed for what to do in case of mist or fog, would take you right over the cliff and down to the rocks in Gardyloo Gully."

To your death. Editor Guy Procter noted that the error in the directions was spotted by the Mountaineering Council of Scotland, which posted the direction not to follow on their web site.

Procter said he was confident nobody had tak-

SNOWING OVER HERE BUT NOT OVER THERE

By Dan Rattiner

The last two snowstorms of this winter, or the lack of the last two snowstorms of this winter depending where you live out here, has been truly strange.

Usually, when we talk about a snowstorm, or any other weather pattern, it's about all of us. The East End is only 60 miles long. Long Island is just 130 miles long. So if a storm hits one place, it hits every place. We're all for one and one for all.

Not this February. The first snowstorm of the month came on February 10th. We'd already been hit by four snowstorms earlier in the winter and we were sick and tired of it. The forecast was for 14 inches. And we panicked. The stores for the first time this awful winter, were picked clean of flashlights, snowshovels, rocksalt and bottled water. And in the Hamptons only two inches of snow fell. Four inches fell in Central Park in Manhattan where people also ran out and stocked up with emergency supplies. Towns in the center of Long Island, however, like Ronkonkoma, Bay Shore and Deer Park, got 15 inches of snow. They took a monster hit.

Frankly, I thought it really strange that this huge wallop of snowfall came down over such a small area — no more than twenty miles across. But stranger things have happened.

Then, however, came the snowstorm last Wednesday. There had been a couple of days in the forties right before and with the prediction of just six inches, nobody panicked. We weren't falling for that again.

But this time, they recorded a trace of snow in Westhampton, two inches in Southampton, five inches in East Hampton and nine inches in Montauk. It was a big blow in that town. There was no snow at all in Manhattan. What the hell was going on?

Damned if I know.

But I've sniffed the air and I have some hunches about it. One of which had to do with the cover of this newspaper.

On February 11, after the first snowstorm, there seemed to be a glimmer that the winter was over. The temperature had risen from the en the wrong turn (nobody has looked closely at the rocks in Gardyloo Gully yet?) and that he was glad it got pointed out before anybody got hurt. He noted that the magazine publishes directions for 200 trail climbs every year and this is the first error that the magazine ever made.

Yeah, and the burnt cookies were the first time we were ever wrong. We've been wrong lots. And it's lucky we haven't got sued.

How much could a person expect to get out of a newspaper if they read a movie time, go to watch a re-run of THE SOUND OF MUSIC only to find LUST AND BODY HEAT showing at the appointed time? For many years, one of the local theaters in these parts would fax us their movie times on a Tuesday evening for the upcoming weekend and while we were printing them for distribution Thursday, would, without telling us, change everything. The guy just couldn't make up his mind.

Oh, the phone calls we would get, the places we would go (the bars), the people we would see (angry readers). Now, of course, we precede our movie log with the caveat and warning CHECK THE LISTING. TIMES CAN CHANGE. And we are off the hook.

Having been in this business for forty years, I would like to give advice to future editors to never, ever, give a clerk or an intern the job of adjusting the tide tables for the shoreline nearest your distribution area. Even if you tell him/her how to do it. "Read this chart for low tide at Montauk Point. Adjust it four hours and two minutes ahead, add an hour for daylight savings time, add five hours and thirty minutes for the next high tide and write the resulting time here, And if after adding and subtracting there no longer is a time in that particular a.m. or p.m. slot, just put a dash in it."

The boat Dan's Papers once put on the rocks was a 27 foot Chris Craft cabin cruiser owned by a man from Freeport. It was so upsetting, I vowed never to put the tide chart in the paper ever again and I never have.

Publishers are respected people in the community. If one of them, for example, me, is driving the lead car in a 10k running race through the back roads of Sagaponack, which I did one year, each of the 800 runners at the starting line will follow. Even when you miss a turn and head off down a road that is not on the route.

Okay, I doubled back and it turned out to be an 11 1/2k that year rather than a 10k. It wasn't like this was the Olympics or something, though you should have heard how people afterwards went on.

It's hard being editor and publisher of a newspaper and getting every single letter and number you put in the paper write. Sometimes, I think I'd have been better off if I had made my career in civil service.

Being a judge, for instance. Guilty. Innocent. Guilty. Innocent. What's so hard about that?

ten to twenty degree range into the thirties and low forties. February was moving right along, the snowdrifts from that first storm had melted and people were beginning to feel the blood flowing in their veins as they sensed springtime around the corner. I met with Paul Friese, our graphic artist and designer, to discuss several paintings we might run on the cover of the paper that would be out February 20. It was nine days away and the choice seemed to be between a painting by Ewa Banas of "Home Sweet Home" in East Hampton covered in snow, or a portrait of a young girl standing in sunshine looking happily at the painter. I told Paul we would run the "Home Sweet Home" painting. It would not be a joyful bursting of springtime.

"I think we are going to have another hit," I said. We sent the designed cover to the printer the next day, Friday.

Over the weekend, I began to wonder if I had been correct. It was a glorious blue sky weekend in the forties, and it seemed everybody who had been out on Valentine's Day the weekend before was out in the Hamptons again.

And then came the snows on Wednesday, forty eight hours before we hit the stands. Two inches in Southampton, five inches in East Hampton and eight inches in Montauk. In Westhampton, where they got just a trace, they grumbled a bit about the painting, I heard.

Is it possible that our weather patterns are changing? That storms are getting smaller and smaller? Could we have a streak of snow pass through Water Mill in early March, burying that hamlet in 12 inches while Southampton and Bridgehampton remain untouche?

We shall see. On our cover this week, however, I hope you enjoy this harbinger of springtime, this beautiful young girl, painted by Lois Ellis. Spring is finally here. Maybe.

The St. Andrew's Dune Church In Southampton Will Have A Defense At Last

By David Stoll

On Tuesday, February 17, the Southampton Village Board of Zoning Appeals (with the Southampton Town Trustees' endorsement) finally agreed to allow the St. Andrew's Dune Church to erect a stone revetment on the beach behind the Church, in order to protect the 125-year-old Church from erosion and winter storms. The Church sought permission over a year ago, hoping to have the structures in place before what turned out to be a rough winter in 2003-04. It is fortunate that the Village's long period of consideration did not result in damage to, or even the destruction of, the Church. Perhaps the Church had the protection of a high authority.

WABC-TV news correspondent Lara Spencer and David Haffenreffer at their Dune Church wedding, September 30, 2000

St. Andrew's Dune Church is located on Dune Road across from Agawam Pond and next to the Southampton Beach Club. The Southampton Beach Club and the house to the west of the Church both have extensive revetments on their beaches to protect against erosion. The effect of these structures on the Church can be severe. Beach erosion behind the Church is accelerated because the powerful forces of nature are squeezed into the narrow beach area, much in the same way a river moves faster when the banks narrow. At the same time, the Church's beach receives less re-

IN SEARCH OF THE PERFECT WAVE

By Dan Rattiner

Many years ago, I lived for six months on the island of Maui. It was an amazing place. Among other interesting things, there were giant waves that would hit the island maybe once a year. They would form up in some far-off part of the Pacific Ocean, maybe near Japan, and then roll across the sea, forty feet tall and in full view of airplanes flying overhead, and they would attack small islands along the way, and finally hit Hawaii, usually along the north shores of the five tiny islands that compose that archipelago. People would go out and surf them.

We arrived to live in Maui in November that year and rented an apartment in Kihei. The waves were normal size at the west facing beach across the way. One morning in early March, while we were eating breakfast, we felt something that made the dishes rattle. At first we thought it was the volcano rumbling or something, but it happened again and again, at about thirty second intervals. We turned on the radio.

One hour later, we were twenty five miles away, standing on the edge of a cliff overlooking Honolua Bay, the biggest surf I had ever seen. Waves rolled slowly in and broke with tremendous crashes on the beach. It was the most extraordinary natural occurrence I had experienced up until that time. People were surfing in it. Determined, reckless people.

We stayed about an hour and watched. It was some show. Then, at one point, over the protestations of my family, I waded out into the rough waters right after one of these waves rolled up, and briefly swam around. There was a terrific undertow, which scared me and I got out. But I had sampled a bit of it.

I have never forgotten that experience, all those years ago, and so this winter, I decided the time had come to go back to Hawaii. It would be a much shorter trip, of course. The newspaper is ten times bigger than it was back then, and I cannot be away from it for long. We would be gone for two and a half weeks. I had no belief we plenishing sand because movements of sand from the beaches on either side of it are stopped by the existing structures. The thinning of the Church's beach places the Church at substantially greater risk during winter storms.

Apparently, a ruling on the Church's application took so long because some government officials were concerned that others would seek similar permits. To avoid such problems, the Church had presented its request as one for a special religious exemption, under Federal law. While lawyers could quite reasonably disagree whether the legal provisions cited by the Church's counsel were intended to apply to this situation, the Village's written decision does not rest upon a religious exemption but rather the "unique circumstances" presented by the application. According to a spokesperson for the Village, the permit was granted because it was the right thing to do environmentally to protect not only the Church but Agawam Pond. Indeed, it would have been a true loss to Southampton if the old, beautiful Church were destroyed because no one was willing to address a problem created by beach management choices on either side of the Church.

The Church's experience illustrates a broader problem. The varied rules for beach protection on the East End seem to leave no one happy, resulting in a never-ending array of ad hoc actions and applications. The Dunehampton Village proponents' effort to escape from Town rules on beach protection; Roy Scheider's support of a petition to President Bush to remove the Georgica groins; and the St. Andrew's Church's application to construct a sea wall are all symptoms of the larger problem of how to manage East End beaches and protect the houses on those beaches. Many are waiting for the Army Corps of Engineers to complete its multi-year study of beach erosion control from Fire Island to Montauk, but the results are not expected until late 2005 or early 2006 at the soonest, and implementation of the Corp's recommendations will take even more time.

If the Towns of East Hampton and Southampton and the beach-front villages within those towns were to get together to make a coherent and unified set of beach protection rules, based on current knowledge and science, the ad hoc efforts would no longer be needed. Such rules could govern how to combat erosion, what type of structures beachfront property owners could erect to protect their properties, what should happen to currently existing groins, like those at Georgica, which are now known to do more harm than good, and what property owners like the Church can do if nearby beaches utilize groins or similar structures. Reaching agreement would not be easy, but the status quo should not be tolerated.

For now, though, it is comforting to know that the St. Andrew's Dune Church will be permitted to take steps — in addition to prayer — to protect itself next winter.

A Rescued Seal Finds His Way Out To Sea From A Beach In Hampton Bays

By Kelly Krieger

Since 1996, The Riverhead Foundation for Marine Research & Preservation has successfully rescued and released an abundance of sea creatures down at the beach. This past Friday, I attended the release of a juvenile harp seal named Remy.

My anticipation was building as I drove over the Ponguoque Bridge in Hampton Bays to a designated area on the ocean side of Dune Road. I met up with Michael and Denise Regan who had traveled from Sayville with their children Michael, Brianna and Lauren. They were giddy with excitement too because they had visited this particular seal several times at the aquarium, to follow his recovery. "The children love spending time at the aquarium and learning about the rescued animals," said Denise. Rebecca Elliston of Southampton, and her two children, Madeline and Austin, heard about the release on WLNG earlier that day and decided to make the trip as well.

The crate he came in

A few minutes later, a big white truck pulled into the parking lot and drove onto the beach. Kim Durham, the Rescue Program Director, and MaryAnn Vaclavik, a volunteer, started to get the crate in position to be moved. They then carried it down to the beach near the water's edge.

A group of approximately twenty people gathered closer to get a look as the door of the carrier opened. Out popped the cutest little harp seal; but of course, I think they're all adorable creatures. Remy was underweight and dehydrated when he was rescued at Jones Beach on December 27, 2003. He certainly looked like he had enjoyed a few meals of herring since then, gaining a total of twenty-five pounds. It took several minutes before he mustered the courage to leave his safe little crate, but eventually he made his way onto the beach.

We all thought he would head for the water immediately, but Remy didn't think so. He began to roll around in the sand and dig in the dirt. He then periodically headed towards the water for a minute or so, but quickly backed a retreat up the beach when a wave splashed his way. It was quite amusing to watch and we were beginning to question whether this little harp seal would ever head off into the big, open ocean. Remy definitely had a lot of spunk, an obvious indication of his remarkable recovery, thanks to the foundation. It took over an hour before Remy decided it was time to go, but off he went and we were able to see his head pop up a few times before he swam off.

The entire experience inspired me to get a closer look at exactly what goes on behind the scenes, so over the weekend, I visited the Atlantis Marine World Aquarium where the Riverhead Foundation is housed. At the entrance, I was greeted by Julika Wocial, a Marine Biologist on staff who has been working with the foundation for several years. We walked into a back area where all the rescued animals are cared for. Robert Di Giovanni, Director and Senior Biologist, gave me the guided tour. There were tanks lining the entire building that is connected to the aquarium. We came across a few Kemps Ridley sea turtles, one of the most endangered species of turtles in the world. Rob told me that every fall, a number of cold-stunned turtles are found along the shores of Long Island. Since 1996, the foundation has improved their survival rate dramatically. They have even been able to revive and rehabilitate turtles that are classified as stage four (no outward signs of life).

We then moved onto the seal holding tanks. The foundation is currently caring for over twenty seals. Some animals are peppier than others, depending on their health condition. Many of the seals suffer from lesions, bacterial infections and dehydration. It takes a lot of dedication and funding to care for these ailing creatures, and without the support of volunteers such as Dr. Rob Pisciotta of North Fork Animal Hospital and Dr. Richard Hanusch of Aquebogue Animal Hospital, who visit the facility several times a week to examine the animals, it would not be possible.

Towards the end of my visit, another yearling harp seal was brought in from Montauk. I decided to stay for his arrival to get a better idea of how it all happens. Every detail of the seal was examined, assessed and recorded, from blood work to weight and measurements. The technology and expertise needed to maintain the necessary care is constantly evolving. The overall survival rate has increased from 50% to 77% since 1996.

The Riverhead Foundation can only continue to help these beautiful creatures that inhabit our waters with the aid of funding, donations, and volunteers. Rob Di Giovanni told me that "unlike a regular business that makes money when it is busy, we spend money here when we are busy." They have accomplished a great deal with the support they've received so far, but they strive to do even more. Like any non-profit organization, the Riverhead Foundation for Marine Research & Preservation needs your support. The animals need it even more.

Howard Dean

Dean, Unbound

Son Of East Hampton Breathes Energy Into The Campaign And Moves On

By Anthony Vela

Last week, Dr. Howard Dean made it official that he would no longer pursue the Democratic nomination for President. However, Dean will continue to put forth initiatives through his web site, www.deanforamerica.com.

From just one month after he officially announced his candidacy in June of 2003, Dean was the frontrunner to win the Democratic nomination and face George W. Bush in November. But after a loss in the Iowa caucus, the Dean campaign never regained its footing. Dean did, however, focus the candidates and shape the discussion and criticism of President Bush, galvanizing the Democrats to the point where others could summon the courage to clearly and forcefully criticize Bush's policies as Dean did.

A combination of factors stopped the Dean campaign, including his so-called angry demeanor, a willingness to say what he thinks, and his perceived lack of electability. Taking hits from his fellow Democrats during televised debates did not help matters for Dean who, towards the end, found himself largely on the defensive. Under the microscope of the media, every gaff was magnified, every gesture analyzed, and every word scrutinized, as they should be, but there was a lot of pressure that went along with this. When Dean let out a banshee-like scream after the Iowa loss, the media harped on it for days, but they failed to mention that he was speaking to his supporters and laughing right after it. The media, once his biggest ally, had turned on him, and twice as fast as he was built up, he was taken down.

> ...if the Democrats do win the White House later this year, they might have Dean to thank.

Howard Brush Dean III was born November 17, 1948. He spent his childhood enjoying the family homes on Park Avenue and in East Hampton, and then graduated from Yale in 1971. He took a job on Wall Street, like his father and grandfather had before him. A few years later, however, he decided to change careers, attending the Albert Einstein College of Medicine. Upon graduating he moved to Vermont, and following his residency, practiced internal medicine.

Dean's political career began in 1982 when he was elected to the Vermont House of Representatives. He was later elected and reelected twice as lieutenant governor, and in 1991 became governor when the incumbent, Richard A. Snelling, died of a heart attack. He was later elected and remained in office until 2003. As governor, Dean was a fiscal conservative, always balancing the books, and he fought hard for healthcare.

Dean's rise as a presidential candidate came from a strong grass roots campaign. Mainly through the Internet, Dean raised most of his $41,217,507 from small donations, and set records for Internet donations. According to the Center for Responsive Politics, 100% of Dean's money came from small individual contributions. In contrast, John Kerry, who now is the frontrunner, has raised $28,209,341, with 71% coming from individual contributions but at one point, had been in such financial straits that he put in $2,887,966 of his own money to help keep his campaign going. Dean used the Internet not only for donations but for "Blogging." A web log, also called blog, is a web site which contains reverse chronologically ordered mail posts by other web users on a particular subject by a single author or a small group. He even conducted polls relating to his campaign on his web site.

Hundreds of thousands of supporters, or what were coined "Deanieacks" propelled the Dean campaign. They came out in droves, organizing and holding local events, talking with people, hosting house parties, and raising money over the Internet.

Many people are cynical towards politicians, believing that they are pre-programmed and say things just to be elected. Although Howard Dean is not considered to be one of those, he still did not benefit from this difference. Again, this could have been his undoing, even if he believed in what he said. For example, when he said that Americans were no safer after Saddam Hussein was captured than before. Since the capture, American soldiers are still dying daily but was Dean being politically correct when he made the comment? It was Dean who was against the Iraq war from the beginning when close to 80% of Americans were in favor. But like the change in the Democratic political landscape, polls now suggest a more evenly divided America when it comes to the war in Iraq.

The cynical attitude in America began after the John F. Kennedy assassination in Dallas in 1963, and it reared its ugly head again and again during the Nixon Watergate scandal, the Iran/contra scandal during the Reagan Administration, and the Bill Clinton sex scandal.

Timing is everything, and it is no different in politics. Maybe in another time, Dean could have made it all the way to the White House. After his inauguration, one could imagine Dean yelling like he did after the Iowa loss, but instead of thinking he was crazy, millions of people all across America would have been screaming with him.

Most people only remember who won, not who came in second, but if the Democrats do win the White House later this year, they might have Dean to thank. Poll after poll had George W. Bush easily winning a second term against any Democrat; even the consensus among Democrats was that nobody could beat Bush. Thanks to Dean, the November election could be as close as the 2000 election, which saw Al Gore win the popular vote by more than 500,000 votes only to lose the White House by 5 electoral votes.

One could hardly mention Dean without mentioning the word fire. You can question Dean's demeanor, and his willingness to say what he thinks, but there is no doubt that a fire burns in his belly. Dean may have ended his presidential run, but he plans to remain in the political consciousness. According to a Dean email sent to his supporters, the goal is still to defeat George W. Bush and support the Democrats in November. On the stump, Dean frequently said that the power to change Washington and take the country back rests solely in the hands of the people and he could not have been more correct.

UH! GEORGE I KNOW
YOU WARNED ME...

...but the other guy said he'd give me their special promotional price and a free seafood dinner for two.

How could you go wrong?

And I would also save a few bucks. You know how it is.

How was I to know that the free dinner would be in that hole in the ground that was supposed to be my pool.

On its own salad.

I don't know what to do. The other guy is gone. His phone is disconnected.

Now my wife isn't talking to me.

My next door neighbor looks at me and says "Grribbit, grribbit. I'm going to call the town about your frog farm".

George, please help me out.

A little far fetched?

Maybe. Maybe not.

We've been designing, building and maintaining award winning pools and spas out here for over 30 years.

Quite a few pool and spa companies have come and gone in that time.

No free seafood dinners. Just fair prices and a sparkling clear pool.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Observations of an Islander #287

Calling all cars...calling all cars...

To me, a car is just a vehicle that gets me from point A to point B. It has five wheels, one of which steers. It ingests gas, water and oil. I know where to put in the gas, but only God and men know where the oil and water go. When I look under the hood of a car, I have the same blank and bewildered stare of a man looking into a woman's purse. It's like looking into the Bermuda Triangle. It is a place full of mystery; many things go in and only secret knowledge can find them again...

Outside of my immediate family, I have no idea who drives what kind of car or truck. It blows my mind that when I drive on the island with my brother David, he knows who's in the car or truck ahead of us, who is behind us, and who is in what location because he identified their vehicle as we drove by it. When we drive up to the Post Office, he knows exactly who's inside. All the men on Shelter Island seem to have this ability. I see guys waiting by vehicles all the time at the Post Office and Fedi's. They just wait for the owner to return so they can talk to him. Leading a secret life on Shelter Island would be next to impossible unless you had a small fleet of vehicles you could rotate daily. Because all know each other by their vehicles, when someone gets a new car or truck, they practically have to put out an APB to keep everybody up to date.

Case in point: My brother just sold his old red Chevy truck, named Scotty (we always name the vehicles in our family. I have Buttercup, before her Daisy, before her Pansy and so on). Scotty was a good old boy, full of faithful service, but he tended to faint on the ferry line or on the ferry itself. Nearly every ferry worker north and south has had a turn pushing Scotty out of the line, or off the boat. My brother thought it was the engine, but I think it was pretty obvious that Scotty had a phobia about boats. Initially, David thought I was nuts, but Scotty's repeated fainting spells on the ferry proved I was right. And everyone knows a car or truck with a ferry phobia is like a horse with a broken leg. You have no choice but to put it out of your misery. So David sold Scotty and bought Woody.

Then all hell broke loose. Suddenly, David was bombarded with complaints from all the other island guys that nobody could find him and nobody knew where he was at any given time of the day because he had changed vehicles without giving proper written notice to every other workman on the island! David said that along with registering a new vehicle, it may become necessary to post a 'Change of Vehicle' notice on the IGA bulletin board. For the record, Woody is a 1987 Custom Cruiser Oldsmobile station wagon with genuine faux wood side panels. David wanted to be able to keep his tools out of the weather so he choose a station wagon to replace Scotty.

But now there's talk. You see, once a man drives a truck, he must always drive a truck. And the truck he drives must increase in size and expensive extras with each incremental purchase. It's part of male evolution. But David has done the unthinkable....he went from a truck to a station wagon. It's like swimming against the current or going from Bosch tools to Kmart brand. This rebellious act, born of unbridled maverick thinking, has cost him dearly. Men are snickering at Woody. The taunts and stares got to Woody so much so that he fainted on the ferry on his first ride. David called me for a consultation. I explained, it probably wasn't ferry phobia, I mean, what are the chances of having two vehicles in a row with that condition? It was just that it was his first trip with David at the wheel and maybe he got a little overexcited while trying to make a good first impression... it could happen to any car.

But the best news for David and Woody is that Garth Griffin, the flame-haired island mensch of immensch proportions, told David that there is no shame in a workmen driving a station wagon. So with a blessing from one of the island's leading workman, there is nothing more for David and Woody to worry about, because Garth said so ...and nobody messes with 'Big Red.'

Authors Writing About The Hamptons

Carl Fisher tried to build a city in Montauk in the late 1920s. He partially succeeded. Later on, after he lost all his money in the Depression, his wife Jane, whom he married when she was sixteen, wrote a biography of him. It was called The Fabulous Hoosier. Carl had built Miami Beach before coming to Montauk. Here is his first look at Montauk, as told by Jane.

Fabulous Hoosier

By Jane Fisher

Chapter 20: Montauk Point

Carl Fisher began building Montauk during the dangerous excitement of the Florida boom.

He was as highly geared as the cars that raced on Speedway. Nothing could stop his planning and there was no limit to his dreams. Of the three thousand lots he had developed at Miami Beach, only a couple of hundred remained unsold. Miami Beach was to him a finished dream.

Jackie and I drove to Long Island. I knew, despite Carl's eagerness, that I didn't matter too much to him. He wanted me around, but he was launched on other plans that went beyond all human ties. He had built Miami Beach on a swamp and saved it from the land sharks and in the very crisis of its boom; he had begun pouring millions into Montauk Point on Long Island, another sandy peninsula that he had determined must be, as Miami Beach had become to the South, the playground supreme of the North.

"I'm going to bring the entire Miami Beach organization north and duplicate everything — going to have a Star Island with a yacht club, and anyone who is a member of it will automatically become a member of the southern yacht club. Same with Howard Coffin's Sappelo Island Club—he's joining up with me," Carl enthusiastically explained.

He showed me the small Port Washington development on the Sound where he had erected docks and a boat yard for Ned Purdy to build speed boats. He had rebuilt an old house for his office, so that people interested in Montauk could easily come out from New York. There were to be homes for Bob Tyndall and Art Reed and other employees. He planned to sell the rest of the lots.

Carl found in Montauk, that sandy eastern tip of Long Island, a project to absorb his capacity for building and organization. The Pennsylvania Railroad had suggested that he promote Montauk, "the future harbor for New York City." Forty-seven ocean-going ships would be able to put in at its harbor, which was deep enough for a battleship. It was argued that passengers from Europe could save a day by disembarking at Montauk instead of New York.

Carl and his associates—Jim Allison, his partner since Prest-O-Lite days; Albert Champion, the spark-plug manufacturer; Howard E. Coffin, who founded Hudson Motors and who was an associate of Henry Ford's in aircraft; the bankers, Richard Hoyt and Charles Hayden—paid two and a half million dollars for nine thousand acres of bleak, sandy waste, with the intention of creating another Miami Beach, with a great transatlantic harbor near New York. Montauk, as Carl planned it, was to cost hundreds of millions.

The tract was nearly three times as large as that developed at Miami Beach. "At least," Carl said, "I don't have to make the land."

He saw it as a northern resort city that would have the charm of the Old World. Montauk would be a city of medieval cottages with thatched roofs, windmills, blooded sheep with shepherds and dogs to herd them, splendid hunters, hunting dogs. Roads and streets, business buildings and hotels would be hidden behind low hills and grassy moors.

All this Carl pictured on the bleak tip of Long Island, swept by fogs in summertime, by storms in winter. Again he was building a city upon sand.

The old residents of the historic Montauk region did not look with too much favor on the proposed new development, but when his yacht the Shadow K arrived in Fort Pond Bay with Carl Fisher aboard, excitement ran high, for rumor had made him practically a legendary character, a man who could do the impossible, a fearless planner whose wildest dreams invariably turned into realities.

It was early in 1926. Work had begun in earnest. Soon newspapers were carrying advertisements with the slogan, "Miami Beach in Winter, Montauk in Summer." Carl was again following the old pattern of his bicycle, automobile and Speedway days. Eight hundred men were working every day. By the end of May, Carl had or-

There's a fire? Is that at Elm Street? Lane? Road? Highway? Where?"

And make them as long and as wonderful and complicated as possible so people can stick their chests out proudly and tell some lady on a computer somewhere that she's going to have to abbreviate some part of it because Highway Behind the Lots to Abe's Crooked Path won't possibly fit on one line if you spell it out.

Let me tell you a story about the street I live on, which is Three Mile Harbor to Hog Creek Road. Two weeks ago, UPS was instructed to deliver a one of a kind rug woven in Afghanistan, from Manhattan to me at my street number 28, last week. They apparently thought any old number on the street would do and so they delivered it to 23, which, as an odd rather than even number, might have been three houses down and across the street, except that there is only the harbor across the street. That meant that they had to have delivered it to 23 on ANOTHER street, which instinct told me would be just plain Three Mile Harbor Road without the To Hog Creek Road, three miles away. Or, 23 Three Mile Harbor DRIVE, which is two miles away in the other direction.

I should have gotten it, they said. They left it on the back porch.

When I got through telling them I do not have a back porch, I am not at 23, and that I do not live on either Three Mile Harbor Road or Lane, they said they were terribly sorry and they would launch an investigation. It would take three to five weeks. I told them they should go to 23 Three Mile Harbor Road or Lane and pick up the package and re-deliver it to 28 Three Mile Harbor to Hog Creek Road and the more paper they pushed around and meetings and Congressional investigations they called and the longer it took, the less likely would be the possibility that the package would still be where they left it.

Don't use UPS. They might be proud of their short brown pants. But until they get over their belief that one house is as good as another, stay away. That's my advice.

Incidentally, people have been asking me if I ever received that fancy cell phone I ordered back in December from AT&T Wireless. I wrote about all the hell I went through trying to get it. Well, I finally did, and thanks for asking. It's everything I thought it would be. But it took 48 days instead of the promised 48 hours to get it. And I was pretty hot about it, about not getting it at the time. And so I wrote about it in these pages.

Let me tell you about the power of the press. Ten days after I wrote that article, the whole AT&T Wireless Company went belly up, bought out by Cingular. That's what you get when you mess with Dan's Papers. And what I get, I suppose, in the next month or two, will be a big white pigeon splat, which is the Cingular logo, to replace the dignified AT&T logo I now get on my little telephone screen when I start it up.

ganized the Montauk Development Company. Miles of good roads were being built. Electric light plants, water mains, huge nurseries for growing shrubs and trees to be used later to beautify the property were established with Fred Hoerger in charge. Speed and more speed. The same old Miami Beach haste was driving everyone connected with Montauk Point. An anthill could not have been busier. Carl rushed from the Port Washington development to Montauk, and visa versa. When he was in one place he wanted to be in the other, and his restless, driving haste was transmitted to everyone.

Homes were started and the ground was broken for Carl's house. Situated on a fifteen-acre tract, it was to have a Mount Vernon-like view from its colonial porch. Bathing casino, cabanas, swimming pool, ocean boardwalk, hotels, apartment houses, laundry, churches, schools, a business block — nothing was overlooked. There was no end to Carl Fisher's plans.

His friends, many of whom had shared his first enthusiasm for Miami Beach, argued against Montauk Point. Jack LaGorce told me he never saw Carl as angry as the day he tried to persuade him to give up his Long Island fantasy.

Jack asked Carl, "Why do you want to make more money? You have more than you need now. Why can't you take things easy?"

And Carl, Jack said, turned on him with black fire in his narrowed eyes. "Damn your soul, who said I'm building Montauk for money? What the hell do I care about money! Miami Beach is finished and there's nothing left for me to do there but sit around in white pants looking pretty like the rest of you goddamn winter loafers." Then Carl stopped suddenly, and when he spoke again it was almost plaintively, as I have heard him speak so many times. "Hell, Jack, I've got to build something. I just have to see the dirt fly.

Third hole: 220 yard par three over the ocean

would see any giant surf. But I wanted at least to see Honolua. We booked a reservation at the oceanfront Napili Kai in Maui, just five miles south of Honolua. It would be a long way from Kihei, my old stomping ground, but it would be near the big surf, if it were to come again. I had a secret hope that it would.

The trip may have had, as a focal point, Honolua Bay, but you can't be going to Honolua every day for seventeen days. And so we rounded it into a full blown vacation with lots of other things to see. We planned to spend the first six days on the island of Kauai, which many people had told us had become the new, hip, surfer island. We'd spend five days on Maui and then four days on the Big Island at the old Rock Resort, now called Mauna Kea, on the Kona side.

As it turned out, we spent part of the time every one of the days we were in Hawaii looking for those giant, forty foot waves. Before we left New York, we read in the paper that huge sets of waves were on their way to Hawaii, three of them, and they would be arriving on January eight and nine, then again on eleven and twelve and then again on fifteen, sixteen and seventeen. All three sets would be hitting while we were in the islands.

Well, to cut to the chase, we did see some big waves, but our itinerary always put us on the wrong island for the monster ones. When the monsters hit Maui, we were on Kauai, when the second set hit Kauai, we were on Maui, and when the final and largest set hit the North Shore of Oahu, we were on the Big Island. The waves took an average of eight hours to get from one island to the next — the islands are pretty evenly spaced — and, well, that's the way it was.

There were other variables. The big sets were not always the size they were predicted to be. And the one time we were in the right place at the right time, on Maui, at Napili Kai near Honolua, it was night. They don't light them up at night. What I recall, vaguely, is waking at three in the morning to something that sounded like giant metal garbage cans banging together far away. It was undoubtedly at Honolua and I was thinking, well, they'll probably still be there in the morning. They weren't.

Still, we had plenty of opportunity to see mini-monstrous waves, including waves that brought warnings from the authorities. These waves were over the legal swimming limit of 25 feet and the authorities were forbidding anybody from going into them.

What authorities? What forbidding? Surfing sure wasn't regulated like this all those years ago. If the surf was up, you went. Now, surfing in waves over twenty five feet is forbidden — unless you were a competition professional of world caliber — they had a list somewhere — and then you could surf, but there would be those noisy jetskis out there with life guards and lifesaving equipment on them to rescue you if you got in trouble.

Of course, we did see people surfing in mini-monsters, which are waves between ten and twenty five feet. On Kauai, we watched surfers in Hanalei Bay from the deck of the elegant Princeville Resort Hotel. We were very high up and quite far away, and at first look, I thought I was looking at ducks bobbing in the water, until I saw one get up on a board and surf. That same day, we also saw surfers in Kalihiwai Bay, with spectators lining the shore.

In Maui, much to my chagrin, I found that Honolua Bay is no longer a dusty, isolated bay down a two lane road, but now off limits — the southern half of the bay, anyway — because of the construction of the giant Ritz Carleton oceanfront resort complex. It is possible to get to the bay by a roundabout way, but the hotel owns half of it. The other half is owned by the Island as park and is open to the public. So you can still use that half.

There is an odd tale about the construction of the Ritz Carleton. A resort developer bought the land, and when digging a foundation, came across about 100 native Hawaiian graves. It was a burial ground.

A two year legal battle ensued, the natives held demonstrations, and, in the end, the Ritz Carleton did the right thing, constructing their hotel back on the property, almost a quarter mile from the water's edge. Where the hotel was supposed to be is instead a great, flat, well-kept lawn, off limits to everyone except native Hawaiians performing "rituals," a sign reads. So, you still can't go there and watch the surfers there.

We did, however, find huge surf at the broad Makena Beach, a wild strand beyond all the resort hotels and condominiums that now line Kihei and Wailea. On the way, we stopped at this traditional fish taco stand (sort of like the old Grace's Hots) where three young surfers warned us that it was pretty grim at Makena now, because a half hour earlier a surfer had drowned.

"It was just too gnarly for him," one of them told me. "So it's pretty much a bummer down there." We went anyway. Rescue and fire was there. But so was the coroner's truck. It was a sad scene.

On the Big Island, during our stay at Mauna Kea Resort, we read in the Honolulu Advertiser that forty footers were expected on the North Shore that day and that surfers had announced an Eddie Aikau Bog Wave Invitational, called the Quicksilver, when, on a short 24 hours notice, professional surfers from all over the world fly to Hawaii with their surfboards to see if they can ride the big ones.

We were on the Big Island, where on the north side that day, the surf was fifteen feet high. We went out to play golf at the Mauna Kea Golf Course. And that was where I had my biggest experience with the surf. The signature hole on this golf course is the third hole. It is a par three. You tee up on a promontory, and you hit across the ocean to a green on another promontory. It's 220 yards. The surf was roaring into the bay and crashing on the rocks. I teed up and, using a wood, nailed it over the sea and onto the green. It was a real thrill.

But there was still another highlight. When we got home (to zero degree weather), we were asked how bad the storm was that hit Hawaii while we were there. The storm had knocked out power, and torn down telephone poles and wires. But we had, luckily, been on a different island from where the storm hit each day, too. When we were on the Big Island, we heard about how it had scrambled Kauai.

But then there was our flight out. At the airport in Kona, the Big Island, the storm finally caught up to us. Winds were gusting to fifty knots. We boarded a Hawaiian 717 and the pilot told us he would blast us out of there and into the sunshine, since the storm was hovering right over the airport.

Basically, out at the end of the runway, he put the pedal to the metal, held the plane tight to the runway for almost its entire length, and then, when he had gotten up a huge head of steam, slammed its controls forward to get the plane to leap quickly into the air and muscle through the storm. No wind shear could match the power of that action, and in forty five seconds, we were out of the storm and soaring into the sunshine.

Our final thrill.

Mussel Men

Anyone who has ever harvested their own mussels locally knows that the grit often found in these beasts can be very annoying. There you are, dipping some crusty bread into aromatic mussel broth made with wine, lemon and garlic when... crunch...you feel like you've just taken a bite of beach. I've tried adding the old "cures" of flour, vinegar, and baking soda (not all at the same time) to local mussels, only to find the darn sand still within them after the effort.

But today, to the relief and joy of chefs everywhere, Prince Edward Island (often listed on menus as PEI) mussels have become widely available and often cost no more than the local variety. Added bonus? No beards! Just rinse these blue beauties from Nova Scotia and they're recipe ready.

PEI mussels are grown on long rough-textured ropes that are suspended in the water from buoys. In 1999, Prince Edward Island produced 14,000 tons of cultivated mussels, or 80 percent of the total Canadian mussel production.

"Because PEI mussels are rope-grown as opposed to being dredged from the bottom in the wild, there is no grit," said Mike Checklick of Braun Seafood in Cutchogue. "They are de-bearded and ready to use and can be stored up to two weeks on ice in your refrigerator." And the cost compared to local wilds? "They are the same price (currently $1.95 per pound) and are actually cheaper for chefs to use because there is almost no labor."

Blue mussels are also very low in fat and carbohydrates, making them excellent ingredients for today's health-conscious recipes. Following are two preparations, one New England hearty and one inspired by Mediterranean style, perfect for this end-of-winter time of year. Bon appetit!

John's North Fork Creamy Mussel Chowder

This was given to me by a dear friend who has spent many years fulfilling the culinary desires of many North Fork residents. Serve with crusty bread and an arugula salad for a light but hearty supper or Sunday brunch.

Serves 8.

Ingredients

2 quarts PEI mussels
2 stalks celery
2 cups diced potatoes
1 cup diced onion
1 teaspoon freshly chopped garlic
4 strips bacon
1 cup heavy cream
1 bay leaf
1 teaspoon celery salt
1 pinch thyme
1/4 cup flour
Salt and pepper to taste
Oyster crackers or crusty bread

Preparation

1. Rinse mussels and place in saucepan. Add celery, bay leaf, and celery salt. Cover mussels with one pint of cold water, cover, and cook until mussels open (about 5 minutes). Reserve mussel broth and remove mussels from shells and set aside.

2. In a double boiler, place heavy cream, potatoes and garlic. Cover and cook slowly until potatoes are tender (about 30 minutes).

3. In a soup pot, lightly brown the bacon and add onion and thyme. When onions are soft, add flour to absorb bacon fat. Stir in the mussel broth and bring to a boil.

4. Add potato/cream mixture and mussels to soup pot containing broth and adjust seasonings with salt and pepper. Serve with oyster crackers or crusty bread.

Frisky Oyster Mussels with Feta Cheese and Blood Oranges

4 cloves minced garlic
1 small bulb shaved fennel
2 dozen pitted kalamata olives
1 cup dry white wine
2 sprigs oregano chopped
3 Tbs. chiffonade* of basil
1 Moro blood orange, sectioned
3 Tbs. extra virgin olive oil
Salt and pepper
2 ounces crumbled feta
1 chopped shallot
1 pinch red pepper flakes

Preparation

1. In a large pan with a tight lid, heat oil until just before smoking.

2. Add garlic, shallot, fennel, pepper flakes, and sauté 30 seconds.

3. Add mussels, olives, wine and cover and steam for 1 minute.

4. Add olives, feta, orange, mussels, salt and pepper and steam about 30 seconds.

5. Plate and serve (don't forget the bread!).

Of Casting Calls, Calamities and...Curtains?

By Jolie Trueman-Honey

Admit it: you can feel your pulse quicken every time the lights dim. When you were a kid, you wanted Broadway tickets rather than a birthday party. You watch the performance of an acclaimed actor in a movie and think, "I could do that!" You sing and invent dance moves in front of the bathroom mirror. That's right. You are a theater lover!

Now, picture this: you're tucked into the shadowy wings with people who some mere six weeks ago were strangers, but now feel closer than family. You're bone tired; you've been working overtime for weeks. But suddenly you step into that flood of light and absorb the energy reflecting from the upturned faces, and the adrenaline rush makes you feel like an all-American idol. And then, later: the applause, and the image (that you will never forget) of your sister (yes, she with whom you fought over borrowed pantyhose!) sitting in the first row, eyes glistening with tears of pride for you.

It's time to merge the fantasy with reality. I know, many of us claim to love the theater, but I'm not talking about some hypothetical notion. I'm describing the indescribable, the joy of being part of a theatrical production, either onstage or backstage. It's the highest high there is and, now's your time to do it.

A recent press release from the North Shore Community Theatre indicates the disturbing news that this Long Island institution, fifty years in existence, may soon be closing its doors due to lack of interest. Not lack of audience, mind you, but lack of people who want to get involved in the productions. Now there's a switch.

And while I don't really want to wax philosophical, isn't this a sad commentary on what's wrong with the world today? Kids getting a masturbatory kick from their Gameboys rather than getting involved in a good stickball game. Teenagers finding everything but surfing the net far too taxing. And we adults, tunneling through the maze of our less-than-satisfying careers in that lonely pursuit of the buck.

Let's take a step back. If you are a theater lover and understand how transforming theater can be both for audience and performers and crew...if you have attended a performance at the North Fork Community Theater and enjoyed it...if you just want to support theater on the East End because in your heart you know it's the right thing...mark your

Wine and Romance Weekend A Great Success

Local wineries participating in the Third Annual Long Island Wine Country Wine & Romance Weekend (February 14-15) have hailed the promotion as a resounding success, with most wineries reporting their best ever Saturday in February. Wine sales were up 35-50 percent and more, with one winery experiencing a 300 percent increase over last year!

Presented by Long Island Wine Council member wineries, the weekend was introduced to encourage tourism on the East End during the winter season. Great weather and increasing awareness of this event brought visitors out to the wineries in record numbers. According to reports, most hotels and B&Bs were booked, and restaurants on both Forks saw brisk business.

"Our Wine & Romance Weekend is designed both to promote the wineries and to assist other local businesses during this relatively quiet period," said Jane Baxter Lynn, Long Island Wine Council's executive director. "It also helps us to highlight the fact that the majority of the East End wineries are now open year-round."

Some comments from individual wineries:

"It was a great weekend for us. We had a hugely successful event on Saturday, with so many new visitors," said Allison Dubin, marketing director at Channing Daughters Winery in Bridgehampton.

Sister wineries Bedell Cellars and Corey Creek Vineyards reported an "extraordinarily successful weekend," said Bill Thompson, Bedell's tasting room manager.

At Peconic Bay Winery, there was a 100 percent increase in the number of people who participated in tastings over last year. Especially popular was the vertical Merlot tasting by winemaker Greg Gove presented on Saturday.

Visitors to the wineries also received a complimentary food and wine pairing recipe booklet published by the Long Island Wine Council, with recipes from celebrated Long Island and New York City chefs. In the foreword, renowned Food TV personality and cookbook author David Rosengarten wrote, "The East End of Long Island has become one of the world's great vineyard regions." I'll drink to that. Cheers.

ART COMMENTARY

ARTS - IN - EDUCATION: STUDENT ART SHOWS

Part 4

Guild Hall was quiet except for the sounds of an excited young boy explaining his work to an equally delighted father as they wandered through the gallery. What a wonderful treat for both the parent, David Gamble, himself an artist, and his son, Zack.

And what a wonderful treat for yours truly. The annual student art shows at Guild Hall and the Parrish Art Museum are two of this critic's favorite Hampton exhibits. This year, both venues expanded the notion of the visual arts at opening day festivities that featured band performances, dance concerts and face painting.

There's no such thing as good or bad art at these shows, and what a relief that is. There's only spontaneity, joy, creativity and often, a connection between the arts and other academic disciplines. Often, too, there are impressive displays of craftsmanship and grasps of aesthetics.

First, let's look at Guild Hall's show. Consider, for example, the matter of technique/aesthetics: photographs by East Hampton High School, particularly the arresting composition of the students' cityscapes and still lifes. Also commanding is the 3D mask by a Bridgehampton School student.

Work by John Marshall's students

For creativity, how about John Marshall's snowflake portraits rendered on plates by the day care and pre-kindergarten children? Or folk art toys by Montauk School?

As far as interesting homages to other cultures, there are Islamic art works and Greek myth reliefs by the Montauk School. This is a good instance where art can enhance the study of other subjects.

The Parrish Art Museum's show also has fine samples of technical expertise, aesthetics, creativity and odes to other cultures/subjects. For combining a multitude of attributes, our hats are off to Southampton High School's "fantasy shoes" and celebration of Cubism, as well as Pierson High School's single book of collages.

These projects at both venues reflect the colorful, splashy ambience produced by the gallery spaces where it's apparent that diversity and not uniformity serve an outstanding purpose in our educational system.

The Guild Hall exhibit will be on view until Feb. 28; the one at the Parrish Museum will be there until March 14.

HONORING THE ARTIST: LOIS ELLIS

This week's cover, by Amagansett resident Lois Ellis, is indicative of why portrait painting can be so unique, especially for this particular artist. "I have a special rapport with my subjects," Ms. Ellis says. "Even years after I have painted their picture, someone will come up to me, often throwing their arms around me in a greeting."

While this gesture becomes more meaningful when the subject is now grown up, Ms. Ellis has many fond memories of young children, recalling anecdotes that make it seem it was only yesterday when she was working on a piece. For example, she says, "I remember a little girl always bringing her knotted socks for a sitting so my pet could play with them."

There are other reasons, of course, why Ms. Ellis has been painting portraits for over 50 years, acknowledging the emotional relationships that people have with their portraits: "A woman said to me once that if her house was on fire, she's grab the portraits I did of her family first."

While admitting the importance of portraits, Ms. Ellis' demeanor does not suggest immodesty in any way; she's just so happy to be doing what she's doing. "When I was 13 years old," she comments, "I decided I wanted to be an artist, get a scholarship and go to art school."

Ms. Ellis saw her dream fulfilled when she studied at the Cleveland Institute of Art in the city where she grew up; she became a fashion illustrator, using real models, after graduation. Even so, Ms. Ellis realized how much she enjoyed portraits when a woman saw her work and asked her to do a painting of her daughter. Ms. Ellis agreed, but only "if I do it as a painting," she told the client. "I meant that I painted with a palette knife, not a brush. That way, I was able to get clear color, not a plain background."

As luck would have it, Ms. Ellis met her husband soon afterwards, and they moved to New York where she continued to freelance. It was her husband, an artist himself, who introduced her to oils. "In school, I did watercolors," Ms. Ellis explained, "and I hated oils until I met my husband. Now I work oil like watercolors."

When Ms. Ellis is not doing portraits, she loves to create figurative works, one of which is hanging in Gurney's beauty salon. This makes sense because she's been swimming there for 25 years, practically making her a charter member.

When Ms. Ellis is not painting, she might also be found ballroom dancing with her husband. This makes sense, too: from grace on the dance floor to grace on the canvas. –Marion Wolberg Weiss

Ms. Ellis may be contacted at P.O. Box 128, Amagansett, NY, 11930.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood In The Hamptons

Kitchen Stories, Miracle

We, the people – whether elite or common (check one) have a right to cheer when our burdensome spirits are given a lift. Hooray! Further, regardless of race, creed or credit rating (no disclosure necessarily required by law) we are allowed to see a "feel good" movie and get that needed boost. Yippee! Privacy is put aside, since it's going out the window anyway, as the government clumsily clumps about in our bedrooms with muddy, heavy club feet and then continues to sully the paths of some to their weddings. Is it sporting? No, but note that the administration's fascination with sports (not particularly of the sexual kind) has taken some pressure off the movie business and bedrooms and kitchens. Hip, hip hooray! Yes, kitchens could be of interest politically. A coupla feel good movies feature sports and the kitchen. The current import, Kitchen Stories, is intelligently funny and totally devoid of microwave HI gross-out jokes. Its low key humor comes out of post war Scandinavia and its social complex fixation with conformity. Somehow, you never question the notion that Sweden had a Home Research Institute that sent out a task force to track and record domestic habits of Norwegian bachelors. In dead pan manner, this remarkable, small film by Bent Hamer, a Norwegian infused with the genius of artists like Jacques Tati, conveys a comedic melodrama that skids so smoothly into a bit of Chaplin sentiment.

A researcher Swede is Folke (Tomas Norstrom), whose expertise is focused on a strange isolated Norwegian, Isak (Joachim Calmeyer), whose uncomfortable home life is tiny and cold. Folke's recording of his observations are, to them, seemingly of enormous importance. Mr. Hamer has made his meticulous film also appear important. He makes Scandinavian utilitarian schematics glow with fresh and very clean, ordinary, anonymity. The stoic, flat depth-of-field-frozen action is controlled to a freaky degree. Just as Folke stares at his subject Isak with professional precision, the director-writer views their contrasting roles with exact reversals and flashes of anger and comedy that crack the icy veneer, only to freeze it up again quickly. Nothing and no one is scarred in the least. Scratched, yes - and it is how the surface is opened that makes this film so compelling. Three cheers!

In the 1980 Olympics, when the United States ice hockey team beat the entrenched world champions of the Soviet Union, the TV sportscaster screamed, "Do you believe in miracles? YES!" Let's hear the cheers – U.S.A.! USA! U.S.A.! The announcer's wonderment accounts for the title, Miracle, a seemingly religious sounding movie. Maybe it is because of the audience's uplifted appearance of being saved. This "Little Team That Could" sports movie adds Patriotism to the usual ingredients of discipline, teamwork overcoming odds, and you know all the rest of the boiler plate items. Patriotism, which has usually been implied, is brought to bear heavily on the team's wonderful achievement, causing it to veer into a nationalistic, crowd-pleasing, warring victory that is usurped by the audience.

The Walt Disney Studio gives unrelenting commercialism, just like its Mighty Ducks and Rookie, in recycling a story that took place long before its target audience was born. More unfortunate is that the misfit coach, working his tail off to get the kids an achievement he could not attain for himself, is a heck of a lot older than that. Kurt Russell is the coach and seems restrained by his period helmet hairdo. The young audience will find the President Ford plaid bell-bottom clothing a gas. But I'm not sure if the hostage taking and oil shortage news clips will stir the heart, tear duct and flag triggers as much as the 20 minute reconstruction of the big game. Rah! Rah! Rah!

Feeling good is good. To that end, the sportscaster who reported the miracle, Al Michaels, may be the most enduring and single person remembered. He's still a force, and is in the movie and best represents the strength of sports' importance. The sports fans are the real Cinderellas. They are transformed by the gift of victory. It's theirs – they earned it the hard way. They paid for it in many ways.

theatre review: the stendhal syndrome... by gordin & christiano

Primary Stages is inaugurating its new artistic home at the just completed and stunning Theatre A in the Elysabeth Klienhans Theatre, with the world premiere of Terrence McNally's The Stendhal Syndrome, two loosely connected short plays concerning art and the human libido. Stendhal's syndrome is a term which describes the dizziness, panic, paranoia, or even madness caused from experiencing or viewing art. The French critic, after whom the syndrome is named, described having palpitations of the heart, being overcome by emotion and reaching the point of encountering celestial sensations from being absorbed in the contemplation of sublime beauty. Rest assured this will not be your experience at the East 59th Street Theatre, where Mr. McNally's amusing work is being staged.

In the first play, Full Frontal Nudity, three American tourists in Florence ruminate about their banal existence while viewing Michelangelo's David for the first time. Their tour guide, played by Isabella Rossellini, in her American stage debut, is asked by the tourists what to look for in the David. She answers "Beauty…knowledge…a moment of truth…who knows…art is powerful, we might see ourselves." Ms. Rossellini is a lovely presence, but her lack of stage experience is evident as she endeavors to portray a worldly, realistic tour guide. When she uses the F word, it becomes most evident that the actress is out of her realm and the character is not within her grasp. The three tourists, played by Michael Countryman, Jennifer Mudge, and Yul Vazquez, are fine. However, Mr. Countryman comes off best, as the other two characters are generalized stereotype – given to mouthing little more than clichés. As a result their apparent transformation at the play's conclusion, although cute, is not believable.

Richard Thomas in The Stendhal Syndrome

Richard Thomas is hilariously convincing in his portrayal of a narcissistic conductor in Prelude & Liebestòd, the entertaining second half of the evening. The world famous conductor is at a podium of the elegant set (beautifully designed by Michael McGarty) conducting Prelude and Liebestod from the Richard Wagner opera Tristan and Isolde. He is flanked stage right by his beautiful wife (Isabella Rossellini), who sits in a balcony watching his performance and stage left in another balcony by a seductive lust-driven young gay stalker (Yul Vazquez). Joining the conductor on stage is a soprano (Jennifer Mudge) and his concert master (Michael Countryman). As the play unfolds, we are privy to the character's inner musings, but it is Mr. Thomas who captures our attention as he is overcome by the Stendhal syndrome. At first he is conflicted by his obligation to his wife and his homosexual longing for the stalker, but ultimately, he is carried away by an almost pornographic sexual encounter from his youth, which may only be a figment of his imagination. Mr. Thomas, in a vastly accomplished and secure performance, delivers a crescendo of passions until he reaches the final emotional climax. One moment he is preening in the audience's adulation, the next he is paranoid they may be noticing his attraction for the youth. In a flourish, he is disdainful of his relationship with his wife, and then he is criticizing the ungifted soprano. Distracted by his thoughts, he is overcome with fear as he loses his way, but quickly regains his composure becoming arrogant and condescending. Finally, however, he surrenders to his fantastic hedonistic memories of a sublime ménage á trois in Italy, when he was just twenty-two. Mr. Thomas accomplishes this remarkable feat with an intensity which simultaneously matches that of the recorded music from Wagner's Tristan and Isolde, displaying the duality of a brilliant artist and the limitations of a mere mortal.

By late spring two smaller Theatres will be completed in the handsome building which houses Theatre A. They are a welcome addition to the theatrical community.

The Stendhal Syndrome is playing a limited engagement at the Elysabeth Kleinhans 59 East 59th Street Theatres until March 27. For tickets call 212-279-4200 or at the box office Mon-Sat 12 p.m.-6 p.m..

Video Visions: Student Filmmakers

LTV and the Hamptons International Film Festival collaborate with Guild Hall to form Video Visions: A student filmmaking venue. This first annual showcase of student films provides a platform for students from middle and high schools across the East End to compete for awards given in various categories. Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Like extra-virgin olive oil, there is a large range and variety of vinegars to choose from. I think of my oils, vinegars, mustards, herbs and spices as accessories in my pantry. Having them on hand affords me the luxury of seasoning and flavoring foods in a variety of ways. Shall I use my sherry vinegar or will my homemade red wine vinegar work better for my salad tonight? Will the tarragon or rosemary do for the chicken tonight? It's almost like completing a wardrobe. Accessorize as a practical way of making all foods, not just salad, more savory, stimulating and zesty.

When it comes to vinegar, remember all that drizzles isn't balsamico. While I have balsamic vinegar in my pantry I will use it for salads sparingly. (Mix it with a little Dijon mustard to make great fat free vinaigrette.) Instead I like to deglaze drippings in a skillet after sautéing chicken, duck or medallions of pork, or a roasting pan full of vegetables.

Balsamic vinegar has a thousand-year history of production in Modena, Italy. The production starts with the grape harvest in the fall. In Italy, Trebbiano, a tart variety is the grape of choice. Traditional balsamic vinegar, which is not considered wine vinegar, is made from the boiled-down must (fermentation) of fully ripened white grapes. There are numerous brands available with a range of flavors. No doubt you have heard of 25-year-old balsamic vinegar. This intensely flavored vinegar can be excessively priced; just a drizzle is used to enhance a dish. A more affordable balsamic that I have enjoyed is Lucini, an aromatic 10-year-old Gran Reserve Balsamico with a crisp, yet sweet edge.

PAN-ROASTED CHICKEN WITH BALSAMIC VINEGAR

An inspired recipe developed from a restaurant review.
Serves 4

2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
4 boneless, skinless chicken breast halves, trimmed of fat
Flour for dusting the chicken
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2-3 shallots, finely chopped
1/3 pound shitake mushrooms, wiped clean and thinly sliced
1/3 cup balsamic vinegar
1/2 cup chicken stock
Nicoise olive garnish
Oven roasted plum tomatoes*

1. Heat the oil and 1 tablespoon butter in a heavy 12-inch skillet. When the butter melts and the foam subsides, dust breasts with flour and put in the pan without crowding. You may have to do this in two batches. Saute over medium-high heat for 2-3 minutes each side until lightly golden. Transfer to a platter as they are done and season with salt and pepper.
2. Put remaining tablespoon butter in the same pan and add shallots. Sauté shallots, stirring over medium heat until translucent, about 2 minutes. Put in the mushrooms and sauté for 3-4 minutes until tender. Transfer to a side dish.
3. Pour the balsamic vinegar in the skillet, bring to a boil and scrape up pan juices to deglaze. Add the stock and return to a boil. Return chicken breasts and mushrooms to the skillet, spooning over juices. Simmer over low heat just to heat through, about 2-3 minutes. Serve with oven roasted plum tomatoes and Nicoise garnish.

* Rinse and dry plum tomatoes (as many as you like) then cut in half lengthwise. Arrange cut side up on a cookie sheet and drizzle with extra-virgin olive oil, kosher salt and fresh thyme sprigs. Roast in a 250-degree oven for 2 - 2 1/2 hours. Can be prepared ahead and refrigerated in a suitable container. Warm in oven before serving.

PORK MEDALLION SAUTE´ WITH BALSAMIC VINEGAR AND SAGE

A winning combination of flavors.
Serves 4

2 10- to 14-ounce pork tenderloins
2 tablespoons canola oil
Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper
2-3 shallots, finely chopped
1/2 cup balsamic vinegar
2 tablespoons, finely cut fresh sage leaves
Sage leaf sprigs for garnish (optional)

1. Trim any excess fat, then cut the tenderloins into medallions (slices) about 1-inch thick.
2. Heat oil in a non-stick skillet large enough to hold the meat in one layer or cook in two batches. When the oil is hot, add medallions and saute over medium-high heat for about 3 minutes on each side until lightly browned. Transfer to a side dish in one-layer, as they are done and season lightly with salt and freshly ground pepper.
3. Reduce heat and add shallots. Sauté until tender and lightly browned. Add balsamic vinegar and sage and stir to deglaze drippings in bottom of the pan.
4. Return medallions to the skillet with any accumulated juices. Spoon over juices and simmer for 3-4 minutes longer. Do not overcook. Meat should feel springy to the touch and juices run clear. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Serve with a puree of potatoes if desired and garnish with fresh sage leaves, if desired.

Away At School. . . By David Lion Rattiner

Reading

I hate reading. I was in my international business class yesterday and my teacher assigned one hundred pages of reading. The entire class needed to read it by the next class, two days later. Now, I don't know about you, but I thought this was ridiculous. I think reading is the worst.

How can this professor of mine expect me to read one hundred pages of a book that is about the globalization of business in the world, in two days? I mean, don't get me wrong, I am really interested in this subject, but one hundred pages? Are you out of your mind?! Why don't you just ask me to build a rocket ship? That would probably be easier.

I tried to be the good kid and read all one hundred pages. I really tried. I got to page thirty. To be honest with you, I got to page five, and then I zoned out for the next twenty five pages. I do this a lot when I read. I swear, my mind will be reading the words, but they might as well be speaking to my brain in Japanese, because I sure as hell am not paying attention to it.

I started to think to myself, around page twenty, about the physical book and the physical author behind the book. I started thinking to myself, hey, I'm not paying attention to a word of this. Some poor writer probably spent years writing this book. He probably traveled the world and did extensive research on the globalization of business. He had to get a book agent, sell his book, go to book signings, edit the thing, do all of this crap that is involved in publishing a book on a grand scale, and here I am not caring at all about what he had to say. I felt bad about this.

The book I was reading is famous. It is called "The Lexus and the Olive Tree," by Thomas Friedman. I felt like looking him up in the phone book and letting him know that I felt really bad that I wasn't really into his book. I wanted to call him and say, "Hi, is this Mr. Friedman? Yes hi. I just wanted to let you know that I went out and purchased your book 'The Lexus and the Olive Tree.'…Oh, you're quite welcome. Listen though, I owe you an apology. I bought your book, but to be honest with you, I am zoning out already….Yeah, I know, I guess it is not for everybody. Anyway, I wanted to tell you that I think you are good writer though, I just am a really bad reader is all…Yep…Yep, no problem…Yeah, I'll see you later."

I imagined this entire conversation in my head.

Suddenly, I was worried. I had read for about an hour, well, I guess I should say that I wasn't really reading for this hour. Let me rephrase. My eyes moved back and forth, recognizing words, as I held a book in front of my face for about an hour. Then I realized that reading can really be annoying.

As you can see, this might pose a problem for a guy like me. I really hope that you haven't zoned out right now. Like, I really, really hope that you haven't. I feel bad if that is the case. HEY MAN! PAY ATTENTION. I'M WRITING THIS THING HERE!

Are you back? Okay, good. Well anyway, I don't really have anything to say. I just wanted to let you know that I really appreciate this whole reading thing. Personally, I hate it. But I am really glad that you like reading. I think it is kind of weird to actually enjoy it, but sometimes, when it is funny, I'll kind of enjoy it. I mean, don't get me wrong, I don't think you're weird or anything. In fact, the only thing that I really like to read is this newspaper, or more specifically, this column, so it makes sense to me that you are reading this.

Who knows, maybe you hate the column. But whatever, that's not my problem. If you've read this far, however, and you hate the column, you should really consider doing the things that you enjoy in life, rather than the things that you hate.

Maybe give writing a try?

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

What a wonderful weekend I had. My daughter in-law Janie came to visit for a weekend of shopping with her sister Patti and her daughter Le Anna and of course, my special little granddaughter Chelsea. The minute Chelsea walked into the house, she shouted, "Let's shop, Nonna." And that we did.

Starting out in Sag Harbor, the first place Chelsea wanted to go was the Sag Harbor Variety Store on Main Street...This is a kid's little paradise, there is so much arts and craft merchandise, toys, books, games and so much more. Now it was time for her mommy and aunt to shop. So...we entered the little Main Street shop called Illusions where there was a sale on clocks and radios at 50% off, hand bags $30, teapots 50% off and 50% off on selected costume jewelry. Janie bought an antique replica necklace and earrings that she just had to wear before we left the store.

Sally Spicer "Baby Friendly" tote

Nearby at Simpatico Shoe Store there was a 20% to 50% off on selected boots, shoes, bags and accessories. This is a neat little shop that has a large variety of wonderful merchandise. Stop in and check it out.

Another shop that we found exciting was Australian Femininity, which is packed to the rafters with women's clothing and accessories. Karen Anne Wagner, the owner of this beautiful shop, is running a "Winter Sale" reducing prices to wholesale on selected merchandise, so that she can make room for her new spring line that will be coming in soon. You will love the dresses, jackets, scarves, and accessories this shop has to offer, especially the eclectic and unique jewelry. See for yourself.

DJ Hart is doing a wonderful sale right now on some of her clothing, hats, bags and accessories. Also, a good source for unique jewelry. I love this shop; DJ does an awesome job putting everything together here.

The Winter Tree Gallery is also having a "Winter Sale." There is a nice selection of etchings and paintings to choose from and an exhibition of Yesterday & Today "Black and White Show" with local and other artists.

Right across the street is Romany Kramoris' Gallery, whose shop is to die for. This treasure is one of my favorites; especially this time of year when the weather gets you down, this is a quick pick-me-up shop with so much to choose from. Filled with books, CDs, lamps, vases, unique lighting fixtures and jewelry, and so much more. Stop in, you will love it!

Bridghampton Common's T.J. Maxx thinks there is a secret behind every great chef; high quality, top-of-the-line cookware... This extensive collection includes cookware, cutlery, flatware, bakeware, teakettles and many more indispensable kitchen items. Moreover, the colors and designs reflect the very latest trends in home décor. One of the highlights of this store is their gourmet cookware at incredible prices. There are top names at amazing savings. Starting February 29, look for a gourmet cookware sale.

Sally Spicer's new Spring/Summer 2004 collection of baby bags, handbags, zippered clutches and totes are now available. The baby bag is made from upholstery-grade fabric with a polyvinyl waterproof lining and bottom. It has a removable, black changing pad and a magnetic snap closure, one large outside pocket, one small and two large interior pockets and two interior bottle holders. They are available in spring/summer fabrics and perennial favorites such as their signature Dragonfly print. The famous backpack is also a baby friendly bag. You will find this little beauty at Rumrunner Kid in East Hampton, or log onto www.sallyspicer.com

Stop in at Meditereno on Main Street in Southampton for a look at exclusive Ottoman-Turkish pottery. They are the direct importers of museum-quality hand crafts. You will flip over these pieces.

Off The Beaten Path: If you're in the area of E. 27th Street in Manhatton, look for The Devon Shop and discover hand-carved French and English furniture, sized and styled to your specifications. Also you can select hand-rubbed finishes and fabrics here. They offer benches, headboards, chairs, cocktail tables, lamp tables, dining tables and boast that hand-tied coil springs and white goose down are all part of their fine construction. Check it out!

Time flying by, we thought we would have a nice relaxing dinner at World Pie on Main Street in Bridgehampton. So...off we went.

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Winter Shopping!

If you know of, or are having any sales and would like to share them with me, or have any questions regarding the shops or sales, please email me at shoptil@danspapers.com or fax me at: 631-537-3330. I'd love to hear from you...

When In Manhattan...

150 Years of Beer

If you've been keeping up with the When in Manhattan tour, you might be tired by now. There have been trips to Harlem and Times Square, sports at the Piers, miles of paintings, and wanderings through the miles of Central Park. Last week, you took your kids to a museum. It's time to have a drink and relax. It's time to meet with other friendly adults, make conversation, and sing songs over a pint without pretense. It's time to stop by McSorley's Old Ale House in the East Village.

America's oldest, continuously operated public house hasn't changed much since it first opened its doors 150 years ago in 1854. McSorley's had humble beginnings, never stopped pouring through Prohibition, and became the "most famous saloon in the world," when the mainstream discovered it in a 1940 pictorial in LIFE magazine. Joseph Mitchel's book, McSorley's Wonderful Saloon, a compilation of essays previously run in The New Yorker, was published the same year.

The floor is covered with sawdust, the wood and fixtures maintain their antiquated feel, and the company is usually good. After all, their motto, "Be Good or Be Gone," is still kept in strict practice. Also in strict practice is the beer. If you're looking for a Cosmopolitan or a Woo Woo, McSorley's is not for you. During the bar's long life, the only drink served has been what Mitchel described as "a rich, wax-colored" ale – delicious, not fancy – in light or dark and served two at a time. McSorley's Old Ale House has been the subject of art and literature and even a United States Supreme Court controversy. Women were only allowed entry in 1970 after constitutional attorneys Faith Seidenberg and Karen DeCrow took their case to the U.S. Supreme Court to gain access. Don't worry, girls, there's no lingering bitterness. Presidents, residents, authors and thieves – everyone from Abe Lincoln to John Lennon have indulged in a "One and One." Woody Guthrie rallied the early American union movement with his guitar from a table in back.

If you go on a busy night, you might be seated at a table with strangers. With the right attitude and the right people, there's nothing better. There's no music. That's okay. There never was. Instead of a meat-market atmosphere, you can converse, share stories, make new friends, and drink beer. Don't be surprised if one of the resident house cats comes by for a visit, if she's not lazing by the coal-burning stove. The small galley in the backroom serves up daily specials, as well as McSorley's famous chili, burgers, some of the most reasonably priced sandwiches in the city, and really spicy mustard for your crackers and cheese. But let's face it, it's about the beer. Visit McSorley's at 15 East Seventh Street, New York City. (212) 473-9148.

For those of you still craving a little bit of the arts, Glucksman Ireland House at NYU has opened a show to celebrate McSorley's 150th anniversary called "McSorley's Sketchbook," featuring drawings by Gregory de la Haba. The artist's first prominent commission was a portrait for Matthew Maher, the owner of McSorley's, in 1995. The portrait of his daughter, Teresa Maher, would prove to be de la Haba's most significant commission. Teresa became his wife in 1998, and their partnership has led to this series of work. The Ireland House is located at One Washington Mews on 5th Avenue between 8th Street and Washington Square Park. Open Monday through Friday, the show runs through April 9th. Call 212-998-3950 in advance to see the exhibition.

WAITING FOR MY MAN OPENS

CAP21 presented the World Premiere production of Tony Di Murro's dark comedy, Waiting For My Man, at the DR2 Theatre in NYC. The play is a dark and humorous tale, directed by Anthony Patellis, where three street people search for redemption. Classic Cars With Bob Gelber

When I walk into a doctor's office, rather than seeing his degrees plastered all over the walls, I think I would prefer a listing of his grades in medical school. Something similar can be said about auto mechanics. In their shops, they should have framed, accredited proof proclaiming their proficiency in car repair, with emphasis on which particular makes of cars they are most adept at fixing.

In the post World War Two era, when the imported sports car craze started with the little, delicious 1947 MGTC, it quickly blossomed into cars like Mercedes, Volkswagen and Porsche. Unfortunately, it was virtually impossible to find a competent mechanic that could properly maintain your foreign car. The only folks who knew anything were the factory car dealers who were sometimes suspect because even their staff mechanics were on a learning curve.

Porsche 356

I'm certain that part of the success of the early Volkswagens (circa 1952-1960) was that they were so robust and basically simple that one didn't have to be an engineering guru to figure them out when something went wrong. The same can be said of the early 356 model Porsches. Generally speaking, if someone could fix a Beetle, he could fix a Porschewagen.

Having had personal experience with 356 Porsches and air cooled Volkswagens, I always thought it was interesting that the Volkswagens ran forever with minimal care while the Porsches needed that special exotic car care and feeding to run dependably. I was always changing the oil, filter and spark plugs on the 356. No small feat on this particular car, because the #3 plug was almost impossible to reach. The silly Volkswagen didn't even have an oil filter. The Porsche always seemed to be out of tune, damn those two carburetors. The Volkswagen made do with one simple carb that never needed adjustment.

My Porsche mechanic was a locally "famous" one who had his shop in Glen Cove. Even though I lived in Manhattan I traveled out to Long Island to have work done on my Porsche. He was good, but maybe he was considered so because no one else knew Porsche's idiosyncrasies. John was a moody and eccentric guy. He refused to work on Volkswagens. If your car was dirty, he wouldn't allow it in his shop. One was never allowed to say anything against the Porsche marque in his presence, although John often spouted snide comments about many of the different design details of the 356s. If John rebuilt your engine, however, a plaque was mounted on the cooling fan cover to state that fact. Because of his sterling reputation, this plaque actually helped the resale of your car.

In 1968, I purchased a used 1965 Ferrari 250 GTL from a Ferrari dealer in Florence, Italy. I was on the Autostrada driving from Florence to Paris when I noticed that the heater wasn't working. I would soon be passing Modena, the home of Ferrari, so I decided to stop and have the heater looked after. The Modena location has mechanics on staff to service customer's cars. When I told them about my dilemma, four white-coated mechanics pounced upon my car, two under the hood and two under the dashboard, to scope out the problem. It looked like a commercial for Ferrari service. I watched in awe as the guys shouted to one another in Italian. In literally five minutes, my "Le Mans" pit stop was over and my car's heater was working perfectly. No wonder Ferrari wins races.

The point is that if you have an unusual car, whether it is a Flathead Ford, Packard or a Ferrari, take it to a mechanic who knows what he's doing. Over the years I've owned many different types of cars. The British cars went to my mechanic in Westhampton. The Italian cars, Fiats and Alfas (alas...no more Ferraris...too expensive) went to my Italian specialist in Southampton. The vintage German iron was pampered by my man in Eastport. My daily beaters were usually American vehicles, and like the Japanese daily drivers I've owned, they usually went back to the dealers for service. One interesting fact that I've noticed about contemporary Japanese cars is that they seldom break. But if they do, nobody likes to fix them except the dealers. In many ways the Japanese invasion is similar to the German invasion of the Beetle of 1952. They are beautifully built, good value and seem to run forever with little care.

Collector cars are becoming so valuable that servicing some of them is becoming prohibitively expensive, mainly because of parts availability. If you were smart enough to buy the right car at the right price, do yourself a favor, have it serviced by the right mechanic. Find your own "Ferrari Factory" here in the Hamptons. Search it out. It exists.

Getting There

HAWAIIAN AIR - Try United or any other airlines for the six hour flight crossing the Pacific. Seats on Hawaiian are so close together, it is a project to cross or uncross your legs. The stewardess announces that everybody has to put their seatbacks up during mealtime; otherwise nobody can get at their food properly. It's that bad. Get a bulkhead seat, upgrade to First Class or take any other airline until they fix this problem. hawaiianair.com.

Kauai

THE PRINCEVILLE RESORT, on 3,000 oceanfront acres, is one of the world's great hotels. Stunning views and service. The breakfasts are like wedding feasts and a real bargain at $16- $19 for the buffet. An excellent restaurant on the premises is LA CASCATA. We had Brodetto di Pesce and Crispy skin Onaga (a fish) with Wild Mushroom Ragout. Four star cuisine. Dinner for two will cost about $160 with tips and drink. 808-603-9330. princeville.com

THE HAWAII MOVIE TOUR - A wonderful trip to all the locations on Kauai where some of the great movies of all time were made. Jurassic Park, South Pacific etc. A special treat is they take you to the Coco Palms, the old resort now closed and in disrepair, where all the Elvis films were shot. You are in a mini-van with a TV over the driver's seat on which you watch clips. 5 hours include lunch. Wonderful fun. Leaves from Kahaa, Kauai, but will pick you up at your hotel. 800-628-8432. $95 per person. www.hawaiimovietour.com.

Maui

THE NAPILI KAI RESORT has a private beach, morning coffee outdoors, a beach bar, a putting green, hot tubs and a whole schedule of activities. Fine lodge accommodations include ocean views, kitchenettes and the friendliest staff in the world. People come again and again. Many families have held reunions here. Napili, Maui. 808-669-6721. napilikai.com

THE OLD LAHAINA LUAU. This is the most authentic recreation of a Hawaiian Luau in the islands. Dozens of beautiful dancers in native costumes. Outdoors overlooking Lahaina Harbor and the sunset every night. Huge buffet of excellent food, including Poi, which you will enjoy being able to tell your friends tastes like kindergarten paste. $85 per person includes dinner, the show and free drinks. Lahaina, Maui. 808-667-1998. oldlahainaluau.com

MANANA GARAGE. One of the most creative restaurants we've ever enjoyed eating at. Latin American Hawaiian cuisine, chopsticks optional. A favorite on Maui. Try Banana rum roasted Scallops, Ahi Ceviche (sashimi-grade ahi with coconut milk), Jalapeno cornbread, basil crusted crab cakes served with Kula corn-black bean salsa and habanero qioli. Dessert? How about sweet potato ice cream sandwiches? Unforgettable flavors. And they work. Dinner for two with drinks will cost $100. Kahului, Maui. 808-873-0220. mananagarage.com.

The Big Island

MAUNA KEA RESORT. What the Princeville is to Kauai, Mauna Kea is to the Big Island. Built by Laurence Rockefeller and designed by Skidmore, Owings and Merrill, the Maua Kea offers splendid ocean views, its own private beach and golf course and several wonderful restaurants including the Pavilion. Enjoy the many two foot long goldfish in the ponds weaving through the establishment. 808-882-7222. hapunabeachhotel.com

HAKONE STEAKHOUSE SUSHI BAR. On the Princeville Property, but at its sister resort, Hapuna Beach Prince Hotel, Hakone is a classic Japanese restaurant of great elegance. Try the Tempura Moriawase, their signature dish which includes assorted deep fried tempura, kabocha pumpkin, asparagus, zucchini, shitake mushroom, sweet potato, shrimp, white fish and dipping sauce. Sushi. Cook your own dinner. Also steaks and lobsters. Dinner with drinks for two will cost about $140. 808-944-4491.

Epilogue

All those years ago, there were two letters waiting for me after we returned from our six months in Maui. One was from a man in New York City offering to buy Dan's Papers. The other was from a man in Maui, offering to sell me his newspaper, the Maui Sun. I agonized over this for about a day. And I decided to stay in the Hamptons. So here I am.

The Garden At Rock Cottage

by Lance Brilliantine

This article is the first in a series on orchids that can be grown in East End gardens. Over the next three issues, Mr. Brilliantine will cover some of the more desirable native orchids, including: fringe orchid (Blephriglottis), swamp-rose orchid (Arethusa), and beard flower (Pogonia).

Tread cautiously – one of our most beautiful, native plants, the Ladyslipper orchid, is in danger of extinction! These alluring plants grow in the debris of oak and pine trees, among rotting bark, and in and among the moss and other materials that create the forest soil.

Sadly, wild specimens are rare because of marauding deer and squirrels, and the gardeners who snatch them up. Although harvesting wild Ladyslippers is prohibited by law, the slow, inevitable decline of these stunning plants continues.

A little background on Ladyslippers confirms they should never be gathered from the wild and warrant our protection.

Many people think of orchids as tropical or greenhouse plants. Yet orchids grow throughout the world and in most climates, where fragments of their habitat remain. Ladyslipper orchids (also called Moccasin and Pouch flowers) occur in both tropical and temperate climates. The tropicals, while generally larger, have nothing over their temperate cousins! Both types of orchid belong to a group of plants named Cypripedium. The plants come in pink and yellow, though some tropicals produce colors such as mahogany, purple, and lime.

In nature, the orchids grow via a symbiotic relationship with a beneficial fungi called a mycorrhizae that provides the nutrition needed for the plants to develop (they are unable to nourish themselves alone.) Collecting wild orchids is fruitless. It destroys the fungus, and, inevitably, the plant. In the wild it takes as long as 15 years for a Ladyslipper orchid to develop into a flowering plant.

A number of nurseries propagate Ladyslippers. To do this, they use artificial growing mediums that contain the nutrients needed. In these controlled environments, full development of a flowering plant may only take 4-5 years. Because of the time and work involved, plants are expensive, ranging from a low of $45 to over $200 per plant, dependent on size, age, and color.

In the wild, Ladyslippers bloom from April through June. Large numbers are typically found in one area due to seed dispersal. They occur in locations with acid soil, especially near pine trees where there is consistent moisture.

If you are interested in growing Ladyslippers – never gather wild plants. Not only is it illegal, it is almost never successful. Rather, purchase nursery plants (a number of growers can be found via the Internet).

To grow Ladyslippers, the site must be properly selected and prepared. Plants grow best in a north or northeast location with up to 75% shade. It is important select to a site where the soil remains cool during the heat of the day, and one that provides both fresh air circulation, and good humidity.

Prepare the soil well before planting. The following mixture is an appropriate base for the orchids: 2 parts each of well-rotted pine mulch and leafmold, 1 part sphagnum moss, and 1 part sand (not sandbox sand, because it contains salts). The mixture can be worked into the top 3-5 inches of soil.

Cypripediums do not like overcrowding, but require short-rooted companion plants such as rhododendron, azalea, andromeda, astilbe, and primula, and trees such as oak, apple, spruce, and pine. The orchids should not be planted close to plants with invasive surface roots such as maple, ash, lilac, cedar, birch, or burning bush.

Ladyslippers can be planted in either the spring or fall. If purchased plants are potted, seat the entire, rooted mass into the prepared soil. If the plants come bare rooted, spread the roots out horizontally in the upper 3-4 inches of soil. Shoot tips should be just below the surface of the soil - about 1 inch below the soil line, and pointing slightly downward. The soil should only be pressed down slightly to avoid compaction that may result in root rot. Plants will work themselves to the appropriate depth as they mature.

Mulch plants with grass clippings in spring, summer, and fall (never use clippings that have been treated with herbicides). Place mulch a few inches from the stems of the plants. Keep the plants moist at all times. In late fall, mulch the plants again to provide winter protection. It is also good practice to place a protective, wire cage over the spot where the orchids grow to deter foraging animals. Fertilize with a strength natural fertilizer at the completion of flowering.

Ladyslippers are one of the "fabulous" garden plants. The orchids deserve our protection and propagation to reintroduce them to the East End.

ONE FOR THE BOYS

Do you have a bit of a pain in the neck during the colder months? Well, I do. His name is Peter and ever since winter began, he's been endlessly complaining about his aching back, legs and arms. What with jogging on the snowy beach, skiing and occasional cold-water surf excursions (rather him than me), it's gotten so bad that his pain has now become mine! So last week, I took desperate measures and decided to visit the experts at Nickel, the new Men's spa in downtown Manhattan that celebs and style connoisseurs are flocking to. The spa, an export of Paris, France, seemed like a good place to get some H. E. L. P. to fix my man and fast. If you haven't heard of Nickel's best selling men's skincare line found in Sephora and other major stores, or wouldn't dream of using any kind of men's beauty (men prefer to call it skincare) products, let alone visit a spa, then wakeup to the fact that the men's health and beauty industry is growing faster than you can say metrosexual, because these days, men are learning to pamper and take care of themselves just as much as women do.

I decided to see for myself, but imagine my surprise when I discovered, as I entered the slick looking lobby, that I wasn't allowed one step further. Women are not permitted in the spa under any circumstances! I was intrigued, so I sent my own private spy along for some reconnaissance work. I convinced my macho Australian man that he should go along for a massage to get some relief – for both our good – but neglected to mention that I'd also booked him a facial! Well, when in Rome…

I waited with baited breath. When Pete returned home with a big mushy smile on his face, I knew I was on to something. So here's one for the boys.

I had a phone interview (remember, no girls allowed) with Bob Napondano, one of Nickel's massage therapists, who gave me some at-home massage tips for Hamptonites who can't get to a 'men only' spa. The first thing that Napondano told me was to make sure to warm up your muscles before any kind of exercise – take a steady run on the beach, or stretch in front of a log fire before major work outs. For aches and pains, "Men have a different muscular mass than women," he says, "there's a lot more mass, which means that to massage a man you have to work harder and go deeper to really effect the muscle. Try using long deep movements and never massage on the bone." For hamstrings, you can strip the muscle and get rid of toxins by sliding your hand slowly and deeply up and down it. Pay close attention to his back too, and note that between the shoulder blades and around the scapula, the shoulder blades are only attached by muscle, not bone. Meaning that shoulders are attached to everything else, arms, back, etc.. Working on the shoulder blade muscles is, therefore, important. Napondano suggests using Nickel's Canaille Massage Oil with hot peppers, $30, to massage the body. It gets warm which helps to ease muscle strains. He also recommends a foot massage with Le Pied, Nickel's foot massage gel. Use both hands with longer, deeper movements, including toes, at base joints and over balls of the feet for fast relief.

I spoke with Philippe Dumont, the creator of Nickel, who used to work for skincare companies like Chanel and Christian Dior, so he knows a thing or two about skincare. He stresses that men's skincare in winter is, just like women's, all about moisturizing. "Moisturizing is the key work! We suggest using Nickel's daily moisturizer Bonne Gueule, $50, twice a day, especially as a night cream," he adds. Another good men's moisturizer is Dr. Brandt's Balanced Body Moisturizer, $50, which is good to apply after bathing – hot baths are another way to warm up hurting bodies.

For aches and pains, skincare, or simply a little pampering…gentlemen, embrace, love and take care of the skin you're in. 'Cos, being a metrosexual doesn't seem such a bad thing.

More men's health and beauty to come…Get Nickel and Dr Brandt's men's skincare products at Sephora www.sephora.com

Police Blotter

Numerous crimes were reported in East Hampton last week involving thefts from parked vehicles. A Maidstone Park Road woman reported a rather symbolic crime to police on Friday. According to reports it will cost her $200 to replace the hood ornament that was ripped off her Jaguar while it sat parked in her driveway.

Police asked a man to stop at headquarters to photograph damage that was reportedly inflicted to his van last Tuesday. According to the Westhampton man, his van was parked in the Shadmoor parking lot in East Hampton when an unknown person tried to break in. In attempting to do so, the culprit punched out two door locks on the passenger side and damaged the rear door. After causing $800 in damage, the person(s) was not able to gain access.

A Smithtown woman called police from Montauk last week. She had parked her car on Montauk Highway to go for a stroll at Camp Hero, and when she returned she found a myriad of items missing from inside. Among them were a $40 leather hand bag, a $20 phone/check book, $30 in cash and a $100 pair of sunglasses. Police didn't say whether the car was locked or not.

Yet another East Hampton Town burglary was committed last Saturday; this time behind the Cablevision building in the Municipal Parking Lot in Amagansett. The victim, a Springs Fireplace Road man, told police that someone entered his unlocked vehicle and stole his Walkman CD Player and a CD booklet containing about eighty CD's. Altogether, the value lost was about $1,200.

An Eastchester couple phoned police last week when they too returned to their vehicle to find items missing. While parked at Seal Haulout Trail in Montauk, someone entered their vehicle and took a $200 cell phone, $50 cash and a Fossil leather handbag worth $400 which contained an additional $50 and another cell phone. The couple was sure they had locked the car, but found no signs of forced entry.

Police arrested a Bonny and Clyde of sorts at the Montauk IGA last Monday. Employees called police while detaining a man and his wife after they were seen leaving the store with a box of over-the-counter medication. The owner of the store said the woman was seen taking the item off the shelf and handing it to her husband, at which time the man placed said medication in his pocket. As they both left the store, employees made their move. The two are being charged with petit larceny.

Southampton Town Police arrested two 16-year-old girls at the Hampton Bays Macy's on Friday. Store employees told police the girls were seen leaving Macy's with merchandise that wasn't paid for. Both girls will be prosecuted as minors.

An East Hampton Town Police officer was traveling North on Accabonac Road when he noticed a Chevy truck driving towards him with two inspection stickers. He turned around and pulled the man over to find that the Three Mile Harbor Road man had illegally placed a Toyota's valid inspection sticker on the windshield of his Chevy and forgotten to take of the expired one. The East Hampton man was placed under arrest and charged with imitation or counterfeit certificate of inspection.

MONTAUK MANIA

Dear Dan,

Thank you for the "true story" of the "Montauk Project". Now we know how it all fits. Why else would an Ecuadorian eel be attracted to the shores of such a distant place as eastern Long Island, in the less than hospitable winter months. (PS: We still have the recipe.)

Dan, I know how you feel as I am living in the shadow of Tesla's experimental coil, here in Wading River. He wanted to transfer energy around the world with his coils. The historic photos of the experiments are awesome; and in those days considered parlor tricks (like nitrous oxide).

There is still an eerie feeling at night in Shoreham. Could it be Tesla's ghost trying to set-up more antennas to help him communicate with extraterrestrials?

Oh, I know they did that in Puerto Rico where the climate matches the needs of "soft scientists." At that latitude, an antenna is moving at near 1,000 miles per hour and can cover a larger arc of the universe. When, added to the 300,000 miles per hour the Earth is traveling, and the possible distance of a million light years to our nearest friends; if our computers can't process faster than a nini-second, then we would have lost the chance for an intelligent exchange. Naturally, they would give up another thousand years; sort of a call back later. By then we may have forgotten what we originally wanted to say (given the one tenth of once percent inspection for prions in the animal protein we consume here in the US.

This is crazy; the "Montauk Project", communicating with aliens; what would eastern Long Island have to face next. Every day I go down to the inlet, here in Wading River, expecting an eel larger than life.

It's been a long winter.

Joseph Rywelski

The giant eel was most recently seen in Lake Agawam. –D.R.

SEE THE SITE

Dear Dan,

I enjoyed your lead article on the Montauk Project. I was stationed at the Montauk Air Base site from 1967 until early 1970. I am planning to visit the Start Park in early March 2004. Is the site completely accessible?

Yup .–D.R.

CASTING NEWS

Dear Dan,

I thoroughly enjoyed your piece on traveling to Hawaii. However, as a film maven, I must tell you that you had the wrong Italian in South Pacific. It was Rosanno Brazzi.

Cheers!

COVERS KUDOS

Dear Dan,

I admire very much Ewa Banas' art of the Hamptons. She shows the old-fashioned spirit that this area is, and as an artist, she is making her way here, her home. Ewa is a talented lady. Let's support her.

Dear Dan,

We like to see recent sales on the Dan's Papers web site, as in your paper. Also love the paper and read it every week except when out of town; however with this web site we can keep abreast of the latest news. Thanking you.

CORRECTED QUOTE

Dear Dan,

Normally I don't read your paper, but a local reporter brought an article in last week's issue to my attention, Shinnecocks Followed? Escorted? A Coincidence? Racial Profiling?

I wish to correct being misquoted.

I (the Shelter Island Town Supervisor) never said that I invited the State Police to the meeting. As a matter of fact, I was totally unaware that the State Police were on Shelter Island during the day of the meeting.

It would be best to call me before you quote me in the future.

Arthur R. Williams
Supervisor
Town of Shelter Island

We apologize for the error. The person who said he'd invited the State Police was Shelter Island Town Police Chief James Read. –DR

Jackson Pollack Could Have Lived Here. In fact, this authentic farmhouse in the heart of historic Springs is just around the corner from Pollock's actual house, and the look and feel is much the same. Ours is on almost a full acre with mature trees for privacy. It has a pool with brick patio surround, plus a separate studio with electricity and another outbuilding. The house itself offers four bedrooms, three baths, a living room with fireplace, a formal dining room, a large country eat-in kitchen, and a sunroom. Most importantly, it has that elusive quality known as "character". Our Newest Exclusive. Just listed at $750,000.
